Single Selling Agency For Potatoes Possible

A "One desk" system of shipping Island potatoes somewhat similar to that of the British Columbia Fruit Marketing Board and a quota system of marketing potatoes may become a reality here as a result of a meeting Friday between the P. to Committee of the Federation of Agriculture and the Potato Marketing Board. The meeting asked the Secretary of the Federation of Agriculture, Mr. Lincoln Dewar, to determine the action of the farmers on the following propositions: 1. The registration of growers, setting up of a central selling agency and the pooling of returns from the sales. 2. Registration of growers and the issuance of tags based on acreage grown with a maximum limit at a given time to any one grower. School district delegates and directors at the annual meeting of the Federation of Agriculture last month were in favor of the quota marketing system. The new vote will enable the rank and file member a chance to express his opinion, it was stated. Officials state that the central selling agency system is not likely to become effective here for several years.

Lt. Col. P. S. Fielding, chairman of the Provincial Civil Defence Planning Committee and Councillor Lt. Col. J. D. Stewart, representative of the City of Charlottetown, returned here Saturday from Hull, Quebec, where they attended the first Civil Defence Staff Forum. The Forum opened Jan. 29 and concluded Feb. 9. Following the Federal-Provincial conference scheduled for Ottawa February 23 at which financial responsibilities for civil defence will be the chief topic, it is expected each province and municipality will proceed with dispatch to formulate plans for their own protection in this connection, which has become a matter of urgency, said Col. Fielding. Hon. J. W. Arsenault, Provincial Secretary and Minister in charge of civil defence, will leave for Ottawa at weekend to attend the Federal-Provincial meeting.

Island Odds And Ends

Perhaps the great majority of Charlottetown citizens believe that Charlottetown's new public building, if it is ever built, should be located two or three blocks north of the site selected on Richmond Street. Mayor B. Earle MacDon-ald is said to share this view and believes very staunchly that construction of the building should go ahead this summer. The Mayor will be in Ottawa this week and will, it is said, ask the Public Works Department to undertake the construction of the much delayed job this year. Charlottetown citizens know beforehand that his arguments will be strongly presented and in plain terms.

Island Soldier Describes Horrors Of Wartime Korea

(Evelyn S. Tufts in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald) FORT LEWIS, Washington, Feb. 9 - If any one has ever seen a dirtier, more forlorn and more depressing country than Korea, Captain (now Major) Andrew B. MacRae, of Charlottetown, would like to compare notes with him. In command of the party which went to the Far East to set up an advance training camp for the Canadian Special Forces, Captain MacRae, a sturdy type and a seasoned veteran, now back in Fort Lewis, admits that sights, sounds and smells he ran into in the Korean peninsula were just too much even for his strong stomach. "Take the lepers, for one thing," he says. "They're all over the place and you never know when you are alongside one, or he's been brushing against you."

Island Soldier Describes Horrors Of Wartime Korea

As soon as a Korean family finds that a child has leprosy, they turn him outdoors to beg, and from then on, he's on his own," he explained. Another thing he couldn't get used to was seeing the kind of things Koreans will eat. "I ran into a batch of prisoners, all in rags, who had been captured by South Koreans and Americans," he said. "What they wanted to eat, and got, was a mass of rice, with some small vegetables that looked like radishes, and boiled fish heads. They wolfed this down in great style and seemed to enjoy it. They had no mess tins so they took off their greasy old helmets they'd been fighting in and poured the stuff in that. They all carry chopsticks, so that was the entire layout. When they finished, they jammed the helmets right back on their heads again."

"They were delighted with these rations because they had been allowed three bowls full. They told the Americans that they had never had more than one bowlful at a meal in their lives. "Yet their physical endurance on such food, is incredible," he went on. "I saw them carrying loads and lifting weights that would have floored a white man - and making good mileage, too. I saw one old man, a civilian who looked 70, at least, carrying his pig when he was driven off his bit of land, and that pig must have weighed 200 pounds. No Canadian could have lifted it, let alone lugged it all day, as he did. The roads are terrible, too, all potholes and stones. But women and children also march all day, with even the small girls carrying man-sized bundles, most of them barefooted, at that."

Island Soldier Describes Horrors Of Wartime Korea

Ignore All Rules "The ordinary people ignore all the laws of sanitation in their daily lives, including washing and keeping food clean, drink at any ditch or puddle they come to, yet still manage to survive. The floors of nearly all their houses are made of mud, and the villages are so putrid with accumulated filth that our UN regiments simply can't set up anywhere near them on account of the sickening smells. "One kitbag, brought back from Korea to Fort Lewis, though it contained only clean underwear, had to be zipped up and carried outside the barracks to be deodorized and sterilized. Even at that, it was enough to make you faint," another officer recalled.

Island Soldier Describes Horrors Of Wartime Korea

Among Maritime officers who were also in the advance party were Lt. R. Rankin, Second Battalion R. C. E., Major R. M. Bourgeois, Second Battalion, 2nd Regiment, Major C. M. Whittier, of the R. C. A. F. C., Halifax; and Major Anderson, M. O., R. C. A. M. C., Halifax. "In connection with food, I was also told of another favorite dish, which Koreans add to their rice-and-rotten-fish-head entree, when they can get it. It consists of a number of kinds of vegetables, cooked together like a stew, and then buried in the ground for two weeks or more. By that time, it is thoroughly fermented and smells is high heaven. A dollop of this, as a sort of sauce, is highly esteemed and considered a great luxury - like caviar or avocado pears.

Island Soldier Describes Horrors Of Wartime Korea

Open Drains "Another thing, I gather, that takes a lot of getting used to, are the open drains. In the towns everywhere is dumped into them, including dead dogs and babies. It came as a slight shock to Canadians to learn that the clothes they had sent to be washed by native laundry-men, had been dunked in these same drains, a little further down the slope. "The hills, by the way, are the community graveyards, the best burying grounds being the high plateaus near the top. However, since bodies all have to be carried up by hand, only the rich can afford to be buried topside, as the
