New and Original Departure in Coal Cooking Stoves

COMBINING
DURABILITY, HEAT AND ECONOMY.

This Cut represents my Patent Fire King Cooking Stove, with the oven, and being partially drawn out, as it appears while being cleaned, or when a new lining is being replaced.

THE above Stove I invented and patented in 1876, and at the present time HUN-DREDS ARE IN USE, giving perfect satisfaction. A large number have been in constant use for eight years, and the repairs have been very trifling, in many instances none have been required. This valuable experience should be sufficient evidence of their durability, which is accounted for in the following:—It has, instead of a Lined Fire Box, two heavy Curved Cylinders, which obviate the expense connected with all Square Cooking Stoves of being compelled to renew Linings and Grates, at least once or twice every year. The heat being radiated from the Cylinders to the floor, where most needed, overcomes a serious objection to all kinds of ordinary Coal Cooking Stoves. The Cylinders are situated directly under the cover holes, and a fire may be made in one or both, thus adapting it for use either in winter or summer, with equal satisfaction, besides effecting a great saving to fuel. I have also attached the PATENT TELESCOPE OVEN to all my Elevated Oven Wood Stoves, such as the Waterloo, Niagara, Star, &c., causing the thousands using them to exclaim—My Stoves are worth TEN DOLLARS MORE than the same kind made by other foundries. The trade and retail purchasers will please bear in mind the fact that although a great advantage is claimed for my own Oven above all others, they cost no more, and being the sole manufacturer and patentee, no other factory can supply. Enquire for Fawcett's Patent Telescope Oven, and if your dealer has none on hand send direct to the Sackville Stove Foundry.

I am adding several new and handsome Patterns this season, which, with my former large variety of One Hundred Different Patterns and Sizes of Cooking, Parlor, Office and Hall Stoves, also Farmers Boilers, Hollowware, Ploughs, Stove Pipes and Flueware, comprise the most complete assortment offered by any manufacturer in the Lower Provinces.
Terms and prices will be found as favorable as can be obtained elsewhere.

Trees.

PART III.

By MRS. A. D. MACLEOD.

Remark the frequency with which trees are alluded to in the Volume of Inspiration.
From the first chapter in the Old Testament to the closing chapter in the New, there is, now and again, reference made to trees. We have in Genesis the tree which brought misery to the human race, and transformed this earthly Eden from a scene of bliss into a realm of mortality, of sickness, suffering and death; whilst in Revelations we have the Tree of Life in the Heavenly Jerusalem, where the curse of Eden can never enter; that Tree of the "healing of the nations" under whose shade the sick and the weary, the oppressed and the impoverished (of earth, shall find health and rest, comfort and ever-enduring riches. In several parts analogy is made between the tree and the righteous man, also betwixt trees and the wicked; for example, in 1st Psalm of David the righteous man is compared to "a tree planted by the rivers," etc., and in Psalm 37th the wicked man is depicted as spreading himself like a green bay tree.
Of the gopher tree was constructed the Ark which sheltered Noah and all committed to his care from the fate of a deluged world, and a tiny leaf, carried by a winged messenger, was to him the signal of a near return to dry land. The cedar tree, the fir, the mulberry, the sycamore, and the precious almug tree, are all alluded to in the Book of Kings, principally in connection with the rearing of that magnificent structure the Temple of Solomon. An oak tree will be remembered as the instrument of God's justice upon the ungodly son Absalom.
Our Saviour is spoken of in prophecy as "The Branch" and as a "Root out of a dry ground." The cedars of Libanon, the Mount of Olives, and the Garden of Gethsemane are, or ought to be, familiar to all; as also that joyful picture of Jesus, "meek and sitting upon an ass" riding into Jerusalem, surrounded by enthusiastic followers who shouted, as they tore down the branches of the trees, and strewed them in His way, "Hosanna to the Son of David; Hosanna in the highest;" and that later dismal scene when the Son of God was led forth from that same Jerusalem; scourged, buffeted, bleeding, forsaken of friends and followed only by an ungrateful, changeful, mocking, unbelieving crowd, to the "accursed tree;" whereon was consummated the final act which won a world's redemption.

All poets are lovers of trees from the accomplished christian gentleman who wrote The beauties of the wilderness are His That made so gay the solitary place Where no eye sees them.

Happy who walks with Him; whom what he finds
Of flavor or scent in fruit and flower; Or what he views of beautiful or grand In nature, from the broad majestic oak To the green blade that twinkles in the sun, Prompts with remembrance of a present God.

to the rough-handed, and almost self-tutor'd peasant bard on the banks of the Ayr. Byron and Burns have been compared; but, though both mighty in intellect, and keen in detecting and exposing hypocrisy and sham, we can scarcely imagine the high-spirited nobleman who, though he lamented in the choicest of language and with intensity of feeling, over "The Isles of Greece! the Isles of Greece!
Where burning Sappho loved and sung," yet exulted most in scenes which suited his fiery temper, condescending to commune with Nature in her more genial aspect.
Whilst Byron delights in "Dark Lochnagar, where stormy winds gather And Winter presides in his cold icy car," and seems thoroughly to enjoy the spectacle of a terrific thunder-storm. Burns sympathizes with the tiny floweret, the gently-flowing river, or the branching tree in the shady woods. What limner could so graphically portray the scene of his last parting with the simple dairy-maid, whose association with the poet causes her name to be remembered when that of the "daughter of a hundred earls" is forgotten. Perceive the life infused into nature in the lines addressed "To Mary in Heaven," written as all of Burns' best compositions are in pure English:—
That sacred hour can I forget, Can I forget the hallowed grove, Where by the winding Ayr we met To live one day of parting love.
Ayr gurgling kissed its pebbled shore "O'er hung with wild woods waving green.
The fragrant birch, the hawthorn hoar, Twined an'round the raptured scene"

Thompson and Wordsworth were pre-eminently poets of nature, but all the poets, not only from Chaucer down, but from the Psalmist to the poet-peer of England, have sung of trees. Spencer Hall, otherwise known as the "Sherwood Forester," because of his intense veneration for old trees, is entitled the Druid of English Literature. The forest, it is said, was "his inspiration, his passion and his dream." No poet ever described the beauties of the glades and groves of England, as did this genius who struggled upwards from poverty to a position in literature and science which commanded universal respect, to such a degree, that notwithstanding the hired ruffians repeatedly sent by jealous medical men to disturb his meetings, he was attentively listened to not only by the aristocracy of wealth, but also by such men as George Combe and Liebig, the celebrated chemist.

The voyager tells of the unparalleled magnificence of the forests of Brazil with their profusion of flowering parasites, and of the gorgeous hue which betoken the near falling of the autumn leaf; but, had we leaf.

the inspiration of the poet's pen, or the limner's pencil, we would delight to portray the woods of P. E. Island just before the frost-dyed foliage succumbs to "November's surly blast," when the quiet, tender rays of an October sun stream over the dark background of green, and bring into charming relief the frontispiece of lighter green, with its dashes of crimson and gold. When visiting in England several years ago, we admired some carefully preserved autumn leaves, one in particular, which a sudden chill had tinged but half with crimson; emblematic of the fair, young freshness of life suddenly snuffed by "Death's unimely frost."

Upon remarking that these were unlike the usual "sere and yellow leaf" of the old country autumn, we were agreeably surprised by the reminder that these leaves were sent by our own hands, some dozen years before from Prince Edward Island.
