The Monkey and the Cats.

'Twas a long time ago, there was a scarceness of rats, And hunger and famine prevailed with the cats,

How delighted they were, we mortals can't tell, They danced and they capered; but list' what befell,

The way it thus happened, you're anxious to know, To these cats it was hunger, starvation and woe;

Their attorney-at-law was a monkey so wise That he'd cheat and defeat one by cunning and lies;

The felines contented, sat down on their tails, While the judge placed some cheese on each side of the scales;

But alas! for the bitten one now 'tis too light, And the judge from the other takes off a large bite;

And they cried in their hunger, 'hold! hold! hold!' Give us each our portion, and we'll be content;

He repeated this fine bit of justice again The poor cats implored and intreated in vain;

The monkey I think is well pleased with his fare, But hark! from the cats bursts a cry of despair;

Now this is the moral so wise and so true It shows what the court and its servants will do;

A Touching Story.

Here is the champion story regarding the street manners of a very numerous class of women and girls:—

On a certain occasion an elderly gentleman started across a broad street. Three young ladies, all abreast, started at the same moment from the other side.

The old gentleman stepped clear to the edge, but the young woman in front of him, literally bore down on him with no idea that he would not plunge his fresh-polished gaiters into the slop on the right of the dry crossing.

The old man looked at the mud, he looked at the young lady, and then he waited until she was within easy reach of him,

When he, gently but firmly taking her hand in his left hand, and said in a low tone: "My dear young lady, I cannot step into the mud. I would give you the way if it was necessary—any gentleman would. But it is not necessary, because you and your companions could walk single file and not force anybody off. Always remember that while it is the duty of a gentleman to be polite and chivalrous to ladies, it is a woman's duty to be considerate, and not make his deference a self-sacrifice."

To prevent polished steel from rusting, after cleaning, and when not in use, take a cloth, with a very little sweet oil on it, and wipe the articles over so as to slightly but evenly oil the surface.

A good cement for china is ordinary carriage varnish. If put together nearly the fracture will be hardly perceptible and it is not affected by water.

A brilliant black varnish for iron stoves and fireplaces is made by stirring ivory-black into ordinary shellac varnish.

The celebrated author, in his admirable essay, clearly demonstrates that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured; pointing out a mode of cure, at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
