"Possessed by an Evil Spirit."

Under this caption the Quebec "L'Evenement," of Saturday, says:—"The lower part of St. John's (Que.) suburbs has been thrown into a state of excitement, within the last few days, by one of those strange occurrences which recall the Arabian Nights. The matter relates to a young girl, upon whom, it is believed, a spell has been cast. The following appears to be the manner in which the young girl caught the disorder, which bears a strong resemblance to St. Vitus' dance. Accompanied by her young man, she had been dancing at a party one Thursday evening, during some previous week. At midnight she felt a kind of presentment that she should not continue dancing into the Friday morning. Nevertheless, yielding to the solicitations of her lover, a fervent disciple of terpsichore, she allowed herself to be persuaded into waltzing with him. The following morning she simply felt tired, but during the night it was quite another thing. She seemed to be swayed by some invisible power, and, since then, she is no longer mistress of her actions. At night she awakens from sleep with a bound, and walks about the house, emitting fearful cries and complaining that she is being tightly encircled in the arms of some person unknown to her. She is no sooner put back to bed than she is up again and goes through the same programme. Her parents and relatives pretend that a frightful noise, accompanied by piercing laughter, is also heard in the house at the same time, and claim that the girl has been bewitched. All this is very strange, if it were true. If the thing really exists, however, we are more inclined to believe that the girl is hysterical or is suffering from mental derangement. In the meantime, we give the facts for what they are worth."

A Roman Vendetta.

A dreadful murder, committed yesterday in the Via dei Carbonari, close to the foundation of Trevi, Rome, has created an intense excitement throughout the city that can only be compared to the assassination of Signor Sonzogno, the editor of the Capitale newspaper, in 1875, and the circumstances of which it vividly recalls. The victim was a Captain Fadda, paymaster of infantry. The murderer had been seen hovering about the Via dei Carbonari for some days, following the captain through the streets, and making inquiries at his house when absent. Yesterday morning he succeeded in decoying the captain's orderly away, and then obtaining entrance to his rooms he attacked him with a large two edged pignard. Attention had just been attracted to the house by the cries of Captain Fadda, when the murderer fled from it, followed by his victim covered with blood, and holding a revolver in his hand. He pursued his assassin a few yards, and then fell to the ground. The murderer was a stranger to Captain Fadda, and would seem to have been an instrument employed to carry out a vendetta.—London Times, Oct. 8.
