Engineers Opposing Quoddy Tidal Project

AUGUSTA, Me. (CP-AP) — The Maine Association of Engineers opposes the proposed $1,000,000,000 Canada-U.S. Passamaquoddy - St. John River power project and says it would be "a serious squandering" of U.S. resources.

A report Wednesday from a special association committee which studied the Quoddy proposal, disagrees sharply with a U.S. interior department assessment of the project is feasible.

The engineers association adopted the critical committee report.

The committee contended despite tax subsidies the project would increase rather than reduce the cost of power to New England consumers.

The committee said after a study of the interior department report it found that the project 'would produce power at approximately twice the cost of that produced by suitable modern methods based on proven technology.'

"This comparison will be even less favorable in the future when atomic power has been further developed," it said.

"A 'boondoggle' of this magnitude would represent serious squandering of the nation's resources, and would divert needed funds from more worthwhile projects," the report added.

Among its objections, the report listed:

The site is remote from centres of population and industry.

Like all tidal projects, it would produce power in an irregular manner, the output varying with the time of day, time of year, wind effects and other factors. It would be very difficult to develop power in a pattern keyed satisfactorily to the demand.

Construction costs would be much higher than on a river hydro-electric project of comparable capacity.

Sea water is fiercely corrosive to almost all metals, resulting in high initial costs, high maintenance and a short life span for equipment.

There would be no flood control, irrigation, navigation, or other important benefits to partially offset the high capital and operating costs of 'Quoddy.

Toronto Newspaper Strike Negotiations Continuing

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto daily newspapers and their striking printers settled one major issue Wednesday, but a union spokesman said later the management introduced more than 20 proposed contract changes at a government-sponsored negotiation session.

Robert J. McCormack, local president of the International Typographical Union (CLC), said the management proposals "would have the effect of operating open shop (non-union) composing rooms."

However, he said the ITU—which claims its members were locked out July 9 — remains willing to continue discussions with the publishers despite its earlier flat rejection of some of the management's proposed terms.

In a statement issued Wednesday night, the union head agreed with an earlier statement by a publishers' spokesman the vital issue of jurisdiction over computers was settled Wednesday, but he charged the management's version of the settlement terms was "completely distorted."

ALL-NIGHT SESSION

The management statement said the ITU had accepted the wording and conditions offered by the papers at an all-night bargaining session July 6-7, before the 600 printers walked off the three papers July 9.

The publishers' statement said:

"The settlement means that there will be no ITU personnel in the data - processing centre and this subject can be reopened after a six - month period. The reopening 'is not binding on either side and is not subject to arbitration.'"

Mr. McCormack said the computer clause language was not in the same form as presented July 7 and the statement on reopening was "completely inaccurate."

"This language embodied important changes considered necessary by the union," Mr. McCormack said.

"Apparently they were at a different ball game," he commented.

The ITU officer said that, with the settlement of the computer issue, the union earlier Wednesday regarded all areas of differences as of July 7 resolved.

SESSION ADJOURNED

It appeared the 20 management - sponsored contract changes he referred to were brought in at an afternoon session, which was adjourned late in the day until 10 a.m. today.

A union informant said these include wage increases, higher than those negotiated in pre-strike discussions, as well as four points proposed by management in July 13 and turned down flatly then by the union.

These consist of a lifetime guarantee against unemployment resulting from automation for present composing room employees, in return for:

Abolition of the make - work practice of resetting advertising material received in proof.

Increased form and then throwing the type away, a traditional contract provision of the ITU.

Removal of composing room foremen and assistant foremen from union jurisdiction.

Extension of any new contract to Dec. 31, 1966. Previous negotiations have been on the basis of an expiry date of next Dec. 31, since the last contract ran out at the end of 1962.

RC Designation Said Disliked

NEW YORK (AP)—The Jesuit - published weekly Roman Catholic magazine America says it "intensely dislikes" the suggestion Catholicism should be regarded as a qualification for the presidency or vice-presidency of the United States.

"That Catholics now can be nominated for the highest offices in the land makes us rejoice," says an editorial in the current issue of the magazine.

"But we intensely dislike the idea that Catholicism should be regarded as a required qualification for the presidency or the vice-presidency."

The magazine notes that U.S. Representative William E. Miller, of New York, a Catholic, was nominated as the Republican candidate.

Opening lead—king of clubs.

Let's say you're playing this hand at four spades and West leads a club. You take it with the ace, cash the A-K of spades, and then lead the ten of diamonds, losing the finesse to the jack.

East returns the eight of hearts, on which you play low, and West's nine forces the queen from dummy. When you now come to your hand with a trump and play the nine of diamonds, finessing again, East takes the king and delivers the telling blow by returning the deuce of hearts. This permits West to cash two hearts and you are down one.

Of course, this is an unlucky result. After all, West was the one who did the bidding for his side and the odds were great that he would have one of the two missing diamond honors, if not both.

But when you think about the hand afterwards, you realize that you contributed to your own defeat and that you really should have made the contract, despite the bad luck of losing both finesses. There was a practically sure way of making ten tricks, and it was not difficult.

At the point when East returned the eight of hearts, you should have put up the king instead of playing low. This would have forced West to take the ace and your troubles would have been over regardless of where the king of diamonds was located.

Whatever West returned, the contract would be safe. Suppose he returned a heart. You would win it with the queen, enter your hand with a trump, and take another diamond finesse.

True, the finesse would lose, but that would be the end of the hand. East would not have a heart to return— he could not have more than two hearts, in view of West's overcall —and when he returned a club, you would ruff it and get rid of the heart loser on dummy's fourth diamond.
