Evening's Golden Shore

Shine Springtime-sun upon the sea, and soil of P. E. Isle As nestled in the Strait and Gulf; and on her bosom smile Ae boats upon the waters ply, and teams and tractors move Upon the strand of sea and land; their values to improve.

Blow breezes o'er this land and sea, that I know and adore From whence I came in early youth, in Nineteen and O'Four But which remains in memory's lane, and youthful heart's desire

When Express sailed from Summerside, with one youth's hope afire. Long years have passed since that one day, that I so oft recall Of leaving pals and parents dear, on tenth, November's Fall At 6 and 29 a.m. from old St. Peter's Bay

When train from Souris, Town-ward bound, began my trip away. From home and parents whom I loved and which I still adore

Altho apart from them I've been for forty years and more And whom have grown to ancient years of ninety six and seven. Those parents dear that I revere, have been to life—it's leaven. So, Springtime's sun and breezes blow and shine on P. E. Isle On those we love and those above, and those without life's guile

On those who drive the teams afield, and those who tractors guide Across the field for nature's yield, and harvest to abide. Be strong young lives; and old hearts brave; and workers kind and true Remember that each rising sun, precedes each sunset's dew

That spreads across the land and sea, on city, farm and moor—As we go on from Morn to Noon, —to Evening's Golden Shore.
