King Cetwayo is not very far off, and there is a prospect of an early and peaceful settlement. The health of the troops is excellent."

A despatch from Capetown says:—"Notwithstanding General Wolesly's hopeful tone, it is reported, on excellent authority, that the Swiazes have, at the last moment, refused to join in the operations for the capture of Cetwayo. What Stanley is Doing.

We have received the following important particulars with respect to the movements of Mr. H. M. Stanley, the African explorer, from a correspondent whose sources of information are thoroughly trustworthy:—"About nine months ago, Mr. Stanley suddenly departed for the east coast of Africa. He afterwards turned up at Zanzibar, in a chartered steamer, but no one could understand with what object the distinguished traveller had gone there, some supposing that they had gone for the purpose of ascending one or two small rivers.

Now, advices have been received that Stanley sailed from Gibraltar for the west coast of Africa three weeks ago, having come through the Suez Canal in this chartered steamer, full of carriers. The object of his journey to the east coast is therefore disclosed—namely, to supply the great desideratum of carriers, and no doubt he has all the men who accompanied him in his last journey through the heart of Africa.

Having left Gibraltar three weeks ago, Stanley has now steamed down the west coast of Africa direct to the Congo, with the intention of opening up the mighty river from the west coast. A steamer laden with goods has been despatched from Antwerp within the last month, under the patronage of the King of the Belgians. This steamer, which will remain at the Congo till Mr. Stanley's arrival, has on board two or three steam barges in sections, which confirms the suspicion that it is Stanley's intention to ascend the Congo, carrying these sections piecemeal round the Gullala Falls. We wish him all success. He is doing great work for the opening up of commerce; and although the Belgians have taken the lead, we have no fear that our own English merchants will lag behind when the way has opened up. This country is once more deeply indebted to the King of the Belgians for the energy he has displayed in connection with an important movement.—Liverpool Post.

Perished by Drowning.

On Friday morning a very sad occurrence took place at Tor Bay, N. S., by which two young men, named Angus Avrey and David Pellrine lost their lives. It appears they left Larrrie's River, in company with another man named Thomas Pellrine, for the shipwreck on Gull Island, which they reached in safety, notwithstanding the sea was very rough. On their way back from the Island their boat became unmanageable in the surf and was finally capsized, only a short distance from shore. Pellrine immediately sank and was seen no more, while Avrey struggled in the surf for a short time, but before assistance could reach him he was drowned. Thomas Pellrine was rescued clinging to a stick of wood in an exhausted condition. The body of Avrey having washed ashore was recovered, but that of David Pellrine has not yet been.
