emigration of the Scottish Highlanders to America at the beginning of the 19th century. He recalled after the defeat of the clansmen in the Jacobite rebellion, the land of the Scottish Chiefs was taken over by English landowners and since the Chief had no longer need for a band of fighting men, the clansman could not obtain the low rental rates to which he had been accustomed, with the result that life for him became unbearable. In some instances, open cruelty on the part of the landowner was resorted to. "Why did a high-spirited band of men who were noted for their fighting prowess, submit to such treatment? The answer lies, said Mr. Heathwood, in the fact that the Scotsman was deeply religious, and was persuaded in most of his dealings by his clergyman. None of the settlers who came to Belfast, he pointed out, were evicted tenants. They had previously intended to join their relatives in North Carolina, but on the advice of Lord Selkirk they came to a British Colony instead. Mr. Heathwood pointed out that whatever the reason for an emigrant's leaving, he will always consider Scotland his native land. "The heritage of the Scot is deeply religious," said Mr. Heathwood, "and we must do all in our power to retain that heritage. Our forefathers built this church and the church to them was the most important thing in their lives. In many instances, more important than their homes. Do we treat it as such today?"

Erected in 1824

St. John's Presbyterian Church was erected in 1824. It is a beautiful structure forty-two feet wide and sixty feet long. The "Wren" steeple is composed of a tower fourteen feet wide and sixteen feet long and surmounted by a steeple 85 feet high. There is a gallery running along both sides and one end. Perhaps the most remarkable thing about the construction of the building is the shingles which were all made by hand with an instrument called a "frow". It was a wedge-shaped blade with a short stout handle placed at right angles. The "frow" was driven through the block of wood with a wooden mallet and each shingle thus made was planned by hand. These original shingles, over 130 years old, secured with iron nails, made by the local blacksmith, still are in a remarkable state of preservation on the walls of the church.

Inside is a plaque to the memory of the first minister, Rev. John MacLennan who was their spiritual leader from 1823 till 1849. Also commemorated are the memories of Rev. A. MacLean Sinclair and Rev. Allan Fraser who was the first theological student to spring from the district.

SHIRLEY BOOTH, BURT LANCASTER STAR IN "COME BACK LITTLE SHEBA"

One very good reason for America to be proud of its motion picture industry is personified in Hal Wallis' production of "Come Back, Little Sheba," a film version of the smash Broadway stage hit, released by Paramount, which opens today at the Prince Edward Theatre. Here is a compelling and emotion-stirring film that took much courage and fortitude on the part of its producers to make. Based on the Theatre Guild's sensational stage hit of a few seasons ago, "Come Back, Little Sheba" stars Shirley Booth, who makes her screen debut, and Burt Lancaster in a role entirely different from his usual blustering, acrobatic hero parts.

On the screen, "Come Back, Little Sheba" retains all the visual excitement, the brilliant and searing observations on human nature and the tense climaxes which made it such a memorable experience on the legitimate stage. Briefly, the story — originally written by William Inge and adapted for the screen by Ketti Frings—deals with the shattered dreams and frustrations of a middle-aged couple. The husband, disillusioned and shackled by despair over a wasted life, takes to the bottle to seek refuge from reality. The wife lives on nostalgic memories of youth, trying to retain a semblance of dignity in a hopeless situation. Bringing their drab and colorless life into sharp contrast is the presence of a pair of young lovers. The girl, a lodger with the hopeless couple, is enamored of a young college athlete. The healthy attraction they feel for each other and the strong passion which engulfs them only serves to accent the lack of romance in the lives of the husband and wife. The situation explodes in a climax of raw emotion which brings the story of "Come Back, Little Sheba" to an unforgettable finish.

As the hopeless wife, Shirley Booth repeats the brilliant performance that she created on the stage and so remarkable is her characterization, that the New York Film Critics, after viewing an advance screening, acclaimed her performance an acting triumph without parallel. Burt Lancaster as her husband adds new laurels to a brilliant screen career in an emotion-packed characterization that held preview audiences spellbound. Terry Moore and Richard Jaeckel as the young lovers bring vibrant youth to the screen. The supporting cast includes Philip Ober, Lisa Golm and Walter Kelley.

Anyone who fails to realize that the motion picture screen has come of age, will be brought convincingly upon seeing "Come Back, Little Sheba"—an adult drama which reportedly emerges as one of the best and finest films of this or any year.

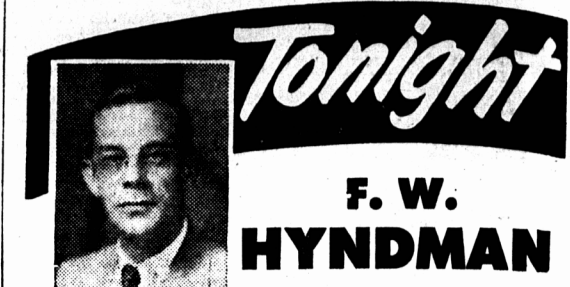

text the 15th verse of 2nd Philippians "That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." "The people who built this church," said Mr. MacPherson, "made it the centre of their every activity. In so doing they were shining as a light to the world. If we are to hold forth the word of life, we must re-discover and recognize God in our daily life." The minister went on to say that worship is all important to every man's life, and without it we cannot have a full life. "The church is as good as the witness of its people and if they can show the right example, truly the gates of hell cannot prevail against it." The music for both services was under the direction of Mrs. M. W. MacDonald of Eldon. The choir was heard in two beautiful anthems, "Lift Up Your Heads O Ye Gates," and "The Spacious Firmament On High."

BERGAMO, Italy, (AP) — A swimming hole caught fire here Wednesday and seven bathers fled to shore with scorched swimming trunks. Flames broke out when a match or spark ignited gasoline which had seeped into the canal from a nearby pipeline.

Stock Car Racing Planned For Montague Soon

"Montague will soon be in the stock car racing field, if present plans become finalized. Work was started last week on the construction of a new 1-4 mile stock car race track at the Montague Racing Park, which will be designed to give to local fans the thrills of stock car racing enjoyed by those in other parts of the province. The new track will be located in centre field running almost parallel to the horse racing track, and will be approximately 27 feet wide. The finish line will be directly across from the grandstand in the same line as the former one used for horse races. The new track will be under the local management of car racing enthusiasts who will conduct stock car racing. For the convenience of the public, a clay ramp is being constructed to the north and south of the grandstand so as to provide a better view of the car races for a greater number. If present plans continue to proceed without difficulties, it is expected that the new track will be ready for operation in the not too distant future.
