OTTAWA (CP) — A new five-cent stamp, a salute to the press of Canada, will be issued by the post office on this anniversary.

Postmaster-General William Lyon Mackenzie King has announced that the stamp will be issued on the anniversary of the printing of the first issue of the Canadian Press.

The announcement also pays tribute to the Canadian Press, the national co-operative news-gathering and distributing organization which this year marks its 40th anniversary.

Mr. Hamilton said in a statement that the Canadian Press is "in its day-to-day dissemination of news material has played an important part in bringing the people of Canada closer together and helping to create the Canada of today."

SALUTE TO PRESS
The first issue of the Canadian Press was designed by Alan Pollock of Toronto. The columns of two newspapers—titled bilingually as Free Press—blend into a background scene symbolizing rural and urban Canada: a grain elevator, telephone and power poles, a factory, a school, a church, tall buildings and a broadcasting tower.

The new stamp is a salute to the fourth estate of this country past and present and to the Canadian Press as an institution.

Canada Proposes NATO Be Armed With A-weapons

PARIS (Reuters) — Canadian NATO delegate Charles Cannon proposed Wednesday that European members of NATO be armed with tactical atomic weapons for use in "limited" nuclear war.

Addressing a conference here of NATO legislators, Cannon predicted that in the event of an all-out nuclear war, Russia would be the aggressor.

The Liberal member of Parliament for the Quebec riding of Ste-de-Madeleine appealed for the establishment of a NATO North American sector in which European powers would contribute.

"If Russia could knock out North America first, he said, the Western world would be deprived of its power of retaliation. Russia then would be able to conquer Western Europe with conventional forces without risking atomic attack within the Soviet Union.

Cannon said the United States and Canada may be in greater immediate danger of attack than Europe because they possess "the riches, the resources and the manufacturing capacities" to supply Europe's means of defence.

If NATO's European members were equipped with tactical atomic weapons, Cannon said, the weapons "would be limited to military areas and targets."

MIGHT AVOID WAR
"This defence could be used to avoid plunging the world into a nuclear war," he said. "It would be necessary to make it crystal clear to any possible aggressor that these atomic tactical weapons will in fact be used against an aggressor."

"But this use would not be restricted to the ultimate weapons of annihilation such as the hydrogen bomb unless the Russians use them first," he said.

Cannon also called for the pooling of scientific and technical talent in NATO countries.

The conference was debating a report by its military committee which said that NATO's reliance on atomic weapons will in fact be used against an aggressor.
