WHISKEY-SNIFF CENTRE OPENED

LONDON (AP) — Scotch whiskey distillers have opened a whiskey sniffing station at Britain's busiest railroad terminal to put commuters on the right scent.

Called a scent-a-rama, the device tantalized thirsty travellers rushing for trains at platform 15 in Waterloo station. The smell was there, all right but no free drinks.

Scent-a-rama is part of a plan to educate people in how to drink whisky—which some may think a highly superfluous educational operation.

According to John Mackie, distillery spokesman, whisky drinking is a subtle, complicated technique comparable with the wine cult.

"To enjoy whisky," said Mackie, "you must savor the aroma" with a brief sniff.

Long sniffs, the experts say, tend to produce adaption olfaction, or nasal fatigue.

The sniffing station at Waterloo contains six casks and the whisky - sniffer lifts a bung, leans over the hole and sniffs.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass

Opening lead—six of spades.

Most good plays you hear about are not really difficult to execute. True, they require a special kind of alertness, but not much more than that.

For example, take this hand where South is in three notrump. West leads the six of spades, dummy plays the seven, East the ten (!), and South the queen.

Of course, East's play of the ten is highly unusual, since almost everyone would win the trick with the king, but it is the right play just the same. Observe that if East plays the king South automatically makes four notrump. The only tricks he loses are a spade, a heart and a club.

But note what happens when South wins the opening lead with the queen. He plays a club which East takes with the ace. East returns the king of spades to the ace.

Declarer has only eight tricks available at this point, so he must lead a heart either now or later; whenever he does, East grabs the ace, returns a spade, and South goes down one.

There are compelling reasons for East to play the ten. He has two important clues to guide him. First, he applies the Rule of Eleven, which tells him that South has only one spade higher than the six which was led. East subtracts the card led from eleven, which indicates that North, East and South together have five cards higher than the six. Since East sees four of them, he knows that South has only one.

Second, he makes use of point count. Since dummy's hand and his own together contain 23 points, South must have exactly 16 points for his 16 to 18 point notrump. West is marked to have the jack of spades and South the queen. The ten therefore becomes the right play at trick one.

Of course, if South is smart enough to read the situation, he can counter East's play by ducking the ten, but this would be a most extraordinary play for him to make.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
