

Author Finds Chinese Children Are Taught To Hate Americans

Frank Tuohy, a British author, is just back from China the world's most populous country. This article on "the children of Papa Mao" is among uncensored reports Tuohy brought out of China.

By FRANK TUOHY

PEKING (AP)—Small Chinese children are being taught to hate Americans. When I protested that American children are not taught to hate Chinese, I was told: "Our system of education is different from theirs, for the U.S. is not a socialist country."

During my first week in China, I said to myself over and over again: "It's wonderful what they've done for the children." In the big cities and the surrounding countryside I saw no signs of hunger; though clothes are sometimes ragged, the children are bright-eyed, their skins clear.

There are few shaven scalps, no scabs or skin ailments. I visited schools in Hangchow where the windows were open to a light snow falling outside, but no child was coughing. There were very few running noses. It is the Chinese children and their mothers who have benefited most from preventive medicine, the pre-natal care, the centres in the communes and the new hospitals in the cities.

The doctors I met in these places nearly always turned out to be hefty young girls with braids and firm handshakes. You find the same type of girl everywhere, in charge of creches, kindergartens and primary schools, where precocious three-year-olds play organized games and perform folk dances with complete confidence and wide smiles of enjoyment.

Eight hundred children applauded as I arrived at the Shanghai children's palace in the garden my two small guides led me to a sort of obstacle race, under barbed wire, over walls and up ladders, down tunnels. Each obstacle represented one stage in the famous Long March of 1935, and the child doing the full course would feel himself nearer the endurance and revolutionary spirit of "Papa" Mao Tse-tung, the Communist leader.

Inside the large converted house, a variety of activities were going on. Upstairs, little boys and girls charmingly sang some verses whose title turned out to be "We must study hard for our revolution." Ten-year-olds did a folk dance, "Embroïdering the portrait of Chairman Mao." Later I heard such works as "We must defend our country, in accordance with Chairman Mao's teachings."

bandaged and an erudite, hobbling away from Viet Nam, under a Chinese slogan "resolutely wipe out the U.S. imperialists." Knock-kneed American soldiers collapsed in front of muscular Vietnamese; paper tigers were throttled; helicopters exploded in dozens above the title "The U.S. imperialists refuse to admit their defeat."

Quite apart from the subject matter of these efforts, I noticed no sign of originality. Everything was copied by the children from clippings from party publications which were pinned to their desks. In fact, I concluded that creative originality is effectively banished from the new China.

PLAY NICE GAMES

Downstairs my two little guides led me proudly into the amusement centre. Children aged seven took part in the slot-machine games: "Shoot the American," "Explode the Kuomintang warship" and a peep show of more U.S. planes falling to pieces. If you hit the jackpot in one game, a puppet Chinese child presented a bouquet of roses to an African "foreign friend." A life-sized rocking horse gave good children the adventure of "riding to see Papa Mao in Peking."

This somewhat traumatic experience in Shanghai was repeated in Feking. North of the forbidden city, the Palace of Imperial Longevity and its ornate surrounding buildings and sunlit courtyards have become the capital's children's centre. Within the palace, six-year-olds lined up to thrust a bayonet into the stomach of a cardboard "G.I. Johnson," while others used a real machine-gun to "shoot up" an American landing field.

In two rooms nearby two teachers with high-pitched voices were lecturing with maps
