WAIL DULLED
KUALA LUMPUR (AP) - The Malaysian capital tested its real warning system but most people were unable to hear it.

The wailing of five sirens mounted on a two-storey building was drowned out by mid-day traffic noise.

You never miss your daily paper until it isn't there

You seldom realize how much a daily newspaper means to you - or the community - until one day it isn't there.

Surprisingly, perhaps, it's the little things that are missed the most - the services, the incidentals. Consider the plight of New Yorkers caught in a city-wide newspaper strike not so long ago.

Well, they never knew what was on at the movies. They missed the daily stock market quotations and the bargain sales at Macy's and Gimbel's.

Statistics may be a heartless way to measure the effects of such a strike. But sometimes, they're the only way. Unless you're a florist, you might not be interested to learn that flower sales fell off some 20%.

Until you realize that the absence of obituary notices helped reduce this loss. Then you begin to see what a newspaper means to a community.

Yes, it's easy to take your daily newspaper for granted as when it's at your front door every day. Not so easy for you - or the community - to get along without it.
