The Langjokull arrived last week from Tampa, Florida, where she loaded canned orange juice, and from Halifax where she took on frozen lobster in Georgetown she took on 600 tons of frozen mink food and 25 tons of salt cod from Gulf Gardens Foods Limited plant, 90 tons of frozen peas from Langley Fruit Packers Limited, Montague, and 130 tons of frozen vegetables and French-fried potatoes transported here by truck from Seabrook Farms Frozen Food Ltd. of New Annan.

The Langjokull, commanded by Capt. Thor Torarson, is of Icelandic registry, and is fully refrigerated throughout. The 280-foot vessel is registered at 1096 tons. After discharging her cargo of mink food and salted cod in Norway she will go to Denmark and finally to England with the balance of her cargo.

P.E.I. Association Has Annual Meeting

The P.E.I. Home Economics Association met recently in the Athena High School, Summerside. The meeting was chaired by the president, Irene Mountain. The guest speaker was Jim MacLean of the Tartan Restaurant and president of the P.E.I. Restaurant Association. He stressed the fact that the restaurant industry is one of the great businesses of the country, and plays an essential role in its economy.

He said that he learned the hard way that this is a business for those with both experience and knowledge, and related some of his own shortcomings when first entering the business. He went on to say that through constant study and the great assistance received from the Canadian Restaurant Association many former difficulties have since been resolved. One important feature of his new knowledge was the introduction of a cost control system throughout the restaurant.

TRAINING CLASSES
"Tourism," said Mr. MacLean, "is one of our essential industries, but to attract the tourist, restaurants must have good food, good service, and an attractive environment. And these can only be attained through education and experience." He then explained the training classes carried on in his own restaurant for waitresses — or sales personnel as they are frequently called as they do the selling job for the operator.

Educational Program Is Planned For Centre

As preparations for the fully professional Charlottetown Festival move into high gear at Confederation Centre Theatre, final plans are also shaping up for an exciting educational program in the arts as an adjunct to the professional entertainment. It is the Atlantic Summer School of the Arts, a program unique in eastern Canada, offering courses in music education; theatre arts; creative writing and ballet.

Its coincidence with the July 4th — September 3rd "Festival of Music and Laughter", and the fact that students will have as their working laboratory a building embodying some of the most advanced techniques in theatrical design in North America, makes the school of special value to those who enroll.

Another attraction to the theatre student is the opportunity to learn first hand from the pros. For instance, those who enrolled in last summer's session say their most memorable afternoon was spent in a three-hour seminar during which John Drainie candidly shared his views on theatre with them. And one student remarked that he learned what theatre organization and discipline really meant from backstage observation of the technically complex "Anne of Green Gables".

This summer the school's guest lecturers will be drawn from an outstanding repertory company which includes Kate Reid, Donald Harron, Eric House and artistic director Mavor Moore.

Regular classes in production, speech, acting, directing, history of theatre, children's dramatics, secondary school theatre, and design will be given by Ronald Irving, director of dramatic arts for Prince Edward Island; Fred Eyringer, head of the drama department at Queens University; Aristides Gazetas, stage design instructor at the National Theatre School; and Sue Kramer, child drama specialist from Edmonton.

Sandra Laine, Confederation Centre School of Ballet instructor, will give classes in movement, as well as teaching the Royal Academy of Dancing classes from the primary to the grade three level.

The course in creative writing will be given by Dr. Earle Birney, whose novel, "Turvey", has been adapted into a musical comedy to play at this summer's festival. Dr. Birney, Canada's leading poet, is a writer-in-residence at the University of Toronto.

In conjunction with the school, Charlottetown organizers George A. Thompson and Christopher Gleedhill will give a course for church organists and choir directors, and the school will also host the Mount Allison University summer school in music education.

The theatre arts courses are accredited by Prince of Wales College in Charlottetown, and some may be equated to those offered by other Universities.

Those interested in the music education courses may write for information to: The Director of Extension, Mount Allison University, Sackville, New Brunswick.
