Rich and Poor,

Prince and Peasant, the Millionaire and Day Laborer, by their common use of this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. They are sugar-coated; contain no calomel; are prompt, but mild, in operation; and, therefore, the very best medicine for Family Use, as well as for Travelers and Tourists.

"I have derived great relief from Ayer's Pills. Five years ago I was taken so ill with Rheumatism that I was unable to do any work. I took three boxes of Ayer's Pills and was entirely cured. Since that time I am never without a box of these pills." Peter Christensen, Sherwood, Wis.

"Ayer's Pills have been in use in my family upwards of twenty years and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afford greater relief than any other medicine I ever tried."—T. F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for a number of years, and have never found anything equal to them for giving me an appetite and imparting energy and strength to the system. I always keep them in the house."—R. D. Jackson, Wilmington, Del.

"Two boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of severe from which I was long a sufferer. — Emma Keyes, Hubbardston, Mass.

Headache,

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again."—A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

THE FAIR GOD.

BOOK ONE.

CHAPTER II.

QUETZAL, THE FAIR GOD.

"I was speaking about Quetzal, I believe," said the old man, when all were fairly on the way. "His real name was Quetzalcoatl (in Aztec mythology, God of the Air). He was a wonderfully kind god, who, many ages ago, came into the valley here, and dwelt awhile. The people were then rude and savage; but he taught them agriculture, and other arts, of which you will see signs as we get on. He changed the manners and customs; while he stayed famine was unknown; the harvests were abundant, and happiness universal. Above all, he taught the princes wisdom in their government. It is to-day the Aztec Empire is the strongest in the world, it is owing to Quetzal. Where he came from, or how long he stayed, is not known. The people and the governors after a time proved ungrateful, and banished him; they also overthrew his religion, and set up idols again, and sacrificed men, both of which he had prohibited. Driven away, he went to Cholula; thence to the sea-coast, where, it is said, he built him a canoe of serpent-skins, and departed for Tlapallan, a heaven lying somewhere toward the rising sun. But before he went, he promised to return some day, and wrest away the Empire and restore his own religion. In appearance he was not like our race; his skin was white, his hair long and wavy and black. He is said to have been wise as a god, and more beautiful than men. Such is his history; and as the prophecy has it, the time of his return is at hand. The king and the priests (the pope) are looking for him; they expect him every hour, and, they say, live in continual dread of him. Wishing to propitiate him, they have called the people together, and celebrate to-morrow, with sacrifices and combats and more pomp than has ever been before, not excepting the king's coronation."

"The hunter listened closely, and at the conclusion said, 'Thank you, uncle. Tell me now of the combats.'"

"Yes. In the days of the first kings it was the custom to go into the temples, and the bravest warriors there set apart for sacrifice, bring them into the tianguis, and make them do battle in the presence of the people. If they conquered, they were set free and sent home with presents."

"With whom did they combat?"

"True enough, my son. The fight was deemed a point of honor amongst the Aztecs, and the best of the world selected. In fact, those were royal times! Of late, I am sorry to say, the custom of which I was speaking has been neglected, but to-morrow it is to be revived. The scene will be very grand. The king and all the nobles will be there."

The description excited the listener's fancy, and he said, with flushed cheeks, "I would not lose the chance for the world. Can you tell me who of the Aztecs will combat?"

"In the city we could easily find out; but you must recollect I am going home after a long absence. The shields of the combatants are always exhibited in the tianguis the evening before the day of the fight. In that way the public are notified beforehand of those who take the field. As the city is full of caciques, you may be assured our champions will be noble."

"Thank you again, uncle. And now, as one looking for service, like myself, is anxious to know with whom to engage, tell me of the caciques and chiefs."

"Then you intend entering the army?"

"Well, yes, I am tired of hunting; and though trading is honorable, I have no taste for it."

The merchant, as if deliberating, took out a box of snuff and helped himself; and then he replied:

"The caciques are very numerous; in no former reign, probably, were there so many of ability and renown. With some of them I have personal acquaintance; others I know only by sight or reputation. You had better mention those of whom you have been thinking."

"Well," said the hunter, "there is Lz'ilil, the Tezucanean, (Ixtilxochitl, son of Nezahuacpilli, king of Tezucaco.)"

"Do not think of him, I pray you," and the good man spoke earnestly. "He is braver as any, and perhaps as skilful, but proud, haughty, sour, and treacherous. Everybody fears him. I suppose you have heard of his father."

"You mean the wise Huapillili?"

"Yes. Upon his death, not long since, Lz'ilil denied his brother's right to the Tezucan throne. There was a quarrel, which would have ended in blood, had not Montezuma interfered, and given the city to Caecama, and all the northern part of the province to Lz'ilil. Since that, the latter has been discontended with the great king. So, I say again, do not think of him, unless you are careless about honor."

"Then what of Caecama? (king of Tezucaco.)"

"He has courage, but is too effeminate to be a great warrior. A garden and a soft couch delight him more than camps, and dancing women better than fighting men. You might grow rich with him, but not renowned. Look elsewhere."

"Then there is the Lord Cuilahuac."

"The king's brother, and governor of Iztapalapan," said the merchant promptly. "Some have thought him better qualified for Chacupitepec than Montezuma, but it is not wise to say so. His people are prosperous, and he has the most beautiful gardens in the world; unlike Caecama, he cares nothing for them when there is a field to be fought. Considering his influence at court, and his love of war, you would do well to beat a shield for him; but, on the other hand, he is old. Were I in your place, my son, I would attach myself to some young man."

"That brings me to Maxtla, the Tezucanean."

"I know him only by repute. With scarcely a beard, he is chief of the king's guard. There was never anything like his fortune. Listen now, I will tell you a secret which may be of value to you some time. Thinking is not quite as young as he used to be by quite forty summers."

The hunter smiled at the caution with which the old man spoke of the monarch.

and rabbits by blowing little arrows at them through a reed. Thus changed, you can very well understand how he can be amused by wits and wit, and make favorites of those who best lighten his hours of satiety and indolence. In that way Maxtla rose—a marvelous courtier, but a very common soldier."

The description amused the young man, but he said gravely, "You have spoken wisely, uncle, and I am satisfied you know the men well. Really, I had no intention of entering the suite of either of them; they are not of my ideal; but there is a cacique, if reports are to be credited, beyond all exception—learned and brave, honored alike by high and low."

"Ah! you need not name him to me. I know, as who does not? And now the merchant spoke warmly. "A noble than Cuilahuac (nephew to Montezuma)—or, as he is more commonly called, the 'Zin Guatmo—never dwelt in Anahuac. He is the people's friend and the Empire's hope. His valor and wisdom—ah! you should see him, my son! Such a face! His manner is so full of sweet dignity! But I will give you other evidence."

"He clasped his hands three times, and a soldier sprang forward at the signal."

"Do you know the 'Zin Guatmo?" asked the merchant.

"I am a humble soldier, my master, and the 'Zin is the great king's nephew; but I know him. When I was only a boy I served under him in Tlaxcala. He is the best chief in Anahuac."

"That will do."

The man retired.

"So I might call up my tananes," the merchant resumed, "and no one but would speak of him in the same way."

"Strange!" said the Tlaxcalan, in a low tone.

"No; if you allude to his popularity, it is not strange; if you mean the man himself, you are right. The gods seldom give the qualities that belong to him. He is more learned than Tlaloc or the king; he is generous as becomes a prince; in action he is a hero. You have probably heard of the Tlaxcalan wall in the eastern valley; few warriors ever passed it and lived; yet he did so when almost a boy. I myself have seen him send an arrow to the heart of an eagle in its flight. He has a palace and garden in Iztapalapan; in one of the halls stand the figures of three kings, two of Michuacan, and one of the Ottomies. He took them prisoners in battle, and now they hold torches at his feet."

"Enough, enough!" cried the hunter. "I have been dreaming of him while among the hills. I want no better teacher."

The merchant cast an admiring glance at his beaming countenance, and said, "You are right; enter his service."

In such a manner the conversation was continued until the sun fast declined towards the western mountains. Meantime they had passed through several hamlets and considerable towns. In nearly the whole progress, the way on either hand had been lined with plantations. Besides the presence of a busy, thriving population, they everywhere saw evidences of a cultivation and science, constituting the real superiority of the Aztecs over their neighbors. The country was thus preparing the stranger for the city, unrivaled in splendor and beauty. Casting a look towards the sun, he at length said, "Uncle I have much to thank you for—you and your friends. But it is growing late, and I must hurry on, if I would see the tianguis before the market closes."

"Very well," returned the old trader. "We will be in the city to-morrow. The gods go with you!"

Whistling his ocelot, the adventurer quickened his pace, and was soon far in the advance.

About Divorces.

William E. Gladstone, in a letter published on Monday last expresses his apprehensions for the future of the United States owing to the large number of divorces. Rev. Samuel W. Dike, of Aburndale, who is a well-known specialist on divorce statistics, submitted to the Grand Old Man some information as to the progress of divorce reform in this country. In reply Mr. Gladstone sent the following letter dated at Hawarden:

REVEREND SIR,—I thank you very much and the Bishop also, for the tracts you have sent me. I have had the advantage, too, of a conversation with Bishop Paddock, and my attention had for some time been drawn to the condition, both of law and of practice, touching divorce in some of the States of the Union, and the facts caused me some alarm as to the future of your great country. I contemplate with interest every movement which may bring us nearer to Christian standard, even without attaining it, a gradual progress being the only one possible and the one ordained. Personally I hold by the law of the whole Western Church, which teaches marriage to be indissoluble, and regards severance a mensa et thoro as the expedient allowed in cases where the gravest difficulty may have arisen within the married state. With best wishes, your very obedient and faithful,
W. E. GLADSTONE.
