Subsidized Rental Housing To Help St. John's Families

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — To help take care of the city's rapidly-increasing population Central Mortgage and Housing's biggest urban redevelopment scheme will soon get under way on the north side of St. John's.

The Newfoundland capital's new subsidized rental housing project, part of a federal-provincial-municipal plan is along the lines of projects completed in Toronto and underway in Montreal. But Mayor Harry Mews says that when the 155 housing units, the majority of them row houses with some apartment structures, are finished there will be nothing like it in Canada.

There will be four blocks of houses with courtyards behind them, an area for children to play, and a routing scheme designed to eliminate traffic problems.

The federal government proves 75 per cent of the cost of the buildings, the povince 25 per cent. The municipality pays for streets, water and sewerage.

CONSTANT DEMAND

Agreements have been signed, the mayor says, and the city council is working on designs for the underground services. Building will start when the services are finished.

Mr. Mews says 1,400 families in St. John's need, newandbetter St. John's need new and better accommodation. Completion of this project will bring to 620 the number of housing units built in St. John's by the federal and povincial governments since 1951.

But the building program is constantly offset by the increase in population.

In 1954-55, Mr. Mews says, about 2,900 new dwelling units were built in and around St. John's. In the same period the population rose from 44,600 to 57,000. "For every home built we have an additional 45 people," he said, "so we are still left with the demands of overcrowding, and that is why new housing has done nothing to clear the slums."

He said the first phase of work on an area designated for slum clearance begins within a few weeks. Plans were completed in 1954 but the council had been tying to get title to the land ever since.

Another federal - provincial-municipal project, the slum clearance scheme would cost more than $500,000 and would result in brick and concrete buildings to house 50 families and playground space for the 900 children in the area.

ELLEN'S DIARY

To The Plowing Match

The Queen's County Plowing Match—this was its day. The time, as yet only at the beginning of harvest was well chosen; the day ideal, cut from September's choicest fabric, as golden as the symbol which among nations in their plowing contest is awarded the winner.

It was the Day, but at Alderlea, where preparations are now being busily made to take care of the harvest, we could appreciate there was little time today to be given to pastimes no matter how interesting or entertaining the prospect.

Concrete foundations, substantial monuments to the wills and skills of the builders completed at one barn of the place, a similar work was to be under-taken today at Rob's.

At breakfast James talked of it. "We must get that done, and by rights the granaries floored new before we put the binder in a field." With the harvest now about ready, who of us on the distaff side of the family, what frail creature of the rib of man, would presume to put a delaying factor in the path of masculine plans no matter what fascinating distraction beckoned?

"The Plowing Match will never be nearer us," someone commented, "it's only a few miles away." The very location drew us, friendly and happy it called a "Welcome" over the fields.

The farmers went to their work of morning, the holidaying children with them, anticipations bent on repairing, in a cozy grove there, the playhouse Mack and Gage had built in a Saturday absorbtion and which since had come to grief at the inroads of the pasturing herd. Stouter stakes must go into its construction "to hold her" Mack decided, even though after the demands of an active Sunday, he admitted to being a bit tired and not in the spirit, as he said "to swing an axe "at such work.

Granddaughter who now must women-like attend or remain away from such boyish endeavours at a whim of theirs, was pleased to be invited to make one of the party of builders, her position vague though Mack assured her, "We'll find something for you to do, but" he stipulated, "you must do exactly as we say"

"Yes" she agreed with a chuckle, "and when it comes my turn to work—to brush the floor or tidy the house, you must do exactly what I say—remember" The day kept them here with time out only for meals—busy happy hours spent out of doors in the loveliness spread about.

"I reckon, Ellen" James came to his armchair in a thoughtful mood after dinner, "we may as well go to that Plowing match. I know there's plenty work to do at home but it will be finished in goodtime without me. Yes" he said rising "I'll go and see if Jeanie can come too"-It is among our happinesses as a family that James, its patriarch treats his daughters-in-law as blood-kin welcoming them warmly to it's interests, we believe in place of the daughters it was not our good fortune to have.

So presently out along the hill, snug in the little truck we went, out into the blue and gold of the September afternoon.

Until tomorrow — — — Diary Good-night.

LET'S EAT

Diet Alone Doesn't Reduce The Weight

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN

"There is much more to losing weight than eating a so-called reducing diet," I remarked to the Chef.

"First, comes a reasonable amount of exercise.

"Next," cut down the amount of salt usually taken and increase the amount of water drunk.

"And last, take the right foods to induce adequate intestinal action to carry off waste."

Many reducers try to eat more roughage food than the intestines can stand. For these persons, it is far better to use more soft bulk in the form of cooked greens and other cooked vegetables; stewed or poached fruits with little sugar or easily digested, really ripe fresh fruit.

"Oranges should be a staple part of the reducing diet. There are only 70 calories to one California orange and it contains the day's recommended allowance of vitamin C, ½ the day's requirement of provitamin A, plus calcium, B vitamins and the very necessary protopectins and bio-flavonoids to stimulate intestinal action.

"A whole orange, peeled, sectioned and eaten with the adhering white membrane an hour before each meal, offsets that letdown feeling.

It dulls the appetite because of its soft bulk and stimulates gentle intestinal action.

"Eat an orange before retiring, for no one should go to bed hungry, especially when reducing. Otherwise, continue with what I term a sensible reducing diet.

"Have a good balanced breakfast and a high-protein lunch and dinner. But leave 1-3 of the food untouched. If in doubt, ask your doctor."

Tomorrow's Dinner: Jellied consomme; New England baked beans; Boston brown bread; ham and egg salad; cantaloupe with lemon sherbet; hot or iced coffee or tea or milk.

Dieting Should Be Fast As Scientific Plan Allows

By IDA JEAN KAIN

Once you've made up your mind to slim down, it's only human nature to want to drop the burden of weight with all possible haste and slip into size 16. But there's always the question: how fast is it safe to reduce?

For most folks the answer is: as fast as a sound, scientifically planned reducing diet allows. And what does that mean? Well, naturally it's never safe to reduce health and vigor along with the excess pounds. So, to safeguard health, a diet must include high quality protein and essential vitamins and mineral salts and 50 grams of carbohydrates a day to slow down a too-rapid buning of fats and pevent acidosis.

In general, such a diet adds up to 1000 calories a day . . . anything less should be prescribed by a physician. If you are sedentary or moderately active, you may expect to lose 2 to 3 pounds a week on a 1000 calorie a day diet.

One doctor, however, recommends this rule of thumb: Re-than 20 pounds to lose . . . reduce slowly if you have less. And his reasons? Re-education of food habits!

A reducing diet must provide more than a means of slimming down. It should establish good food habits. Day-by-day eating of the right foods can eventually retrain the appetite control center in the brain and re-educate food tastes so that eating for normal weight is no struggle. More and more, doctors are reminding us that it's futile to slim down unless we mean business . . . and intend to stay slim for a lifetime.

FLIMSY EXPEDIENTS

It's this re-education and re-training that makes fad diets such flimsy temporary expedients. True, you can lose weight on steak - and - potatoes and buttermilk-and-bananas, but who wants to exist a lifetime on that fare? Nobody, of course. So fad diets won't do a thing to maintain normal weight later on.

The excessive overweight has everything to win by losing rapidly. The sooner she sheds the excess burden that can play havoc with heart and other vital organs, the better. But even at a fast clip, on a safe reducing diet, she has to stay with it long enough to get a running start on re-education of her food tastes.

The story is different for the "lighter" overweight with 10 to 20 pounds to lose. A pound a week is a safe bet for her. That allows 10 to 20 weeks to get a firm grip on good food habits . . . and once new food habits are entrenched, she is more likely to keep her weight normal.

Mark Flowers In Braille

TORONTO CP) — Whispering ferns, sweet-smelling roses and fragrant herbs fill a city garden here which has not been planned to provide beauty for the eye, but for the other senses.

The garden is the first of its kind in Canada, specially planted for the blind at the Canadian National Institute for the Blind headquarters.

Ten thousand plants have been arranged in raised beds which are marked with braille tags, so that the blind will know what they are smelling or feeling.

It was planned by the Garden Club of Toronto and made possible by donations from more than 500 persons. Gifts of flowers from overseas include 5,000 tulips, daffodil and scylla bulbs from the Holland Bulb Association and 100 rose trees from Colchester Horticultural Society, England.

The garden has a sun terrace and a fountain of Italian marble, designed so that it makes a sound like a waterfall.

More than 200 sighted men and women worked on the garden, which has walks of grass, cement, tile and crushed stone so that blind walkers can find their way around by ear.

Father Has Tax Alternative In The Baby's First Year

TORONTO (CP)— The income tax appeal board has upheld a claim that could mean a saving of thousands of dollars for Canadian fathers.

The board upheld an appeal by Glen Woolley, who claimed $400 under a section of the Income Tax Act which says this exemption is permitted for any child not previously eligible for family allowances.

Mr. Woolley entered his claim in 1954 for his daughter, born in November of that year.

The revenue department rejected his claim on the grounds that his daughter was eligible for family allowances, saying Mr. Woolley was entitled only to $150 exemption in addition to a $5-a-month family allowance for each month left in the year.

Chartered acountant J. T. Symons, acting for Mr. Woolley, appealed the ruling, claiming that section 85C of the act meant the full exemption was permitted for a child not previously qualified for ababy bonus.

The revenue department said the section applied only to immigrant children, and not native-born babies.

The appeal board, however, ruled Thursday that the act, as worded, gave an individual the choice of the full exemption, or part exemption if a family allowance is claimed.

This applied to the first year only.
