Then you will think it will be more convenient in the summer, and when that comes you will defer it indefinitely.

Of course, every young couple would rather be by themselves. That is perfectly natural and no reflection whatever upon mother-in-law. You would feel the same way about your own mother. It is just that a husband and wife who love each other very much are sufficient unto themselves and any third party is in the way.

But the more you indulge in this sweet selfishness the more it grows upon you until it turns a virtue into a vice. For, after all, we cannot live to ourselves alone. We have obligations to others, and especially we have family obligations that are debts of honor that we cannot shirk.

ANSWER: An inferiority complex is when you think too little of yourself. A superiority complex is when you overvalue yourself. Both are to be deplored.

DOROTHY DIX cannot reply personally to readers, but will answer problems of general interest through her column.
