Now, Sir, I admit that Banking is safe to the country, under prudent management, with even a greater issue than the 200 per cent granted by the Bill on its paid up Capital, providing the amount be not more than one-third of its subscribed Capital,— the Shareholders being legally liable for the remaining two-thirds.

There is a wide difference, I conceive, between the permission to issue three times the amount of the paid up Capital, with such a proviso, than without it,—for in the one, the Country has a legal guarantee for security; in the other, permission is given to issue 200 per cent beyond any legal liability.

It does not meet the difficulty, by saying for every pound we issue, security is given for that amount; or value is received for all the amount of over issue; or that honest men have the management of the Bank. The Bill does not make them liable over the amount of Stock subscribed for, so that legal liability ceases at the amount of the subscribed stock.

A Private Bank, on the other hand, like all other commercial transactions, is based upon the principles, of the party concerned being liable in Law for every pound issued, and upon the real or supposed wealth and honor of the Conductors of such Bank. They have the privilege of extending their operations to any amount, providing there be no statute to the contrary. But if the men be of a reckless, speculative character, they may entail ruin upon hundreds. This, I presume, is the reason why the Legislatures of different Countries where Banking is carried on, have interfered, and in some to such an extent that it is impossible for the Country to be imposed upon. And I venture to affirm that there is not a Country in the world, where permission is granted for any Joint Stock Bank to issue 200 per cent over its subscribed and paid up capital.

I conceive the error to have arisen from the fact of this being the first Bill of the kind introduced here, and following too closely the acts of other Countries, without duly considering all the circumstances of the case.

I am no Lawyer, nor Legislator, in the general acceptation of the term; nor do I conceive it at all necessary that I should be, in order to be able to lay the basis of a Bill which should give to the share-holders of the Bank ample remuneration, and at the same time, legal security to the Country.—And this can be effected by the following method: let the Capital Stock be, say, £30,000; the Bank to commence operation when one-third of the amount is deposited in its vaults; then to have the privilege of issuing paper to three times that amount, (so far the present Bill provides.) But the Country cannot fail to perceive that upon every call made upon the stock-holders for further instalment, and further issue to take place thereon in the proportion of three to one, that the security ceases in a corresponding ratio, under the present Bill.

But instead of calls for a second instalment to enable the Directors to extend their operations, let the books be opened and a further amount of stock be disposed of,—say, £30,000 more; let, as before, one-third of that amount be paid, and so on to the limited amount £100,000. By this method, the Bank does a profitable business, and the country has a legal guarantee as security for every pound issued.

Or, if you would rather, let the capital stock beginning be £100,000, and allow the privilege to commence operations on 10 per cent being paid up, and permission to issue paper to three times that amount; and on the Directors seeing it practicable to extend their operations, let a call be made for a further instalment of 10 percent and so on, as the nature of the case may require;—but at no time to issue paper beyond three times the amount of paid up Capital; and at no time, under the present Charter, should the issue exceed £100,000, the amount of subscribed Capital.

Should the Corporation at any time deem it expedient to extend their operations beyond £100,000, application can be made to the Legislature for the extension of the Charter. By this means the operations of the Bank can be extended as far as its most ardent supporters could desire. But, in any case, the Bank should be liable to quarterly inspection by the Government.

Upon these principles only (except that adopted by the United States, that of being bound to take Government securities to the amount of the Capital Stock) can Banks be considered safe.

Under the present Bill, our paper would be at a heavy discount out of the Colony, as soon as it is known.

These are reasons why I would call attention to the matter just now, that we may not be deprived any longer of the full benefit of such an institution.

Much more might be said; but enough, I presume, can be drawn from the above to satisfy any thinking mind, that however desirable it may be to have a Bank established among us, that in order to credit and respectability, its basis should be more secure than the present Bill provides.

Yours, &c., &c.
SCRUTATOR.

"An Emigrant."—We do not exactly concur with him in his notions of allowing the beard to grow, nor do we think that he has adduced any new light upon the matter. These things are mere matters of fashion or individual taste, in all countries; and those who have fine bushy beards and mustachios will, most likely, cultivate them; while those to whom nature has not been so liberal, will prefer to keep "their chins new reaped." Our business is more with the inside of the heads of our readers than the outside.

We thank "A Subscriber," for coming forward in our defence from the attack of the Advertiser. We have long since made up our minds, never to notice any observations respecting ourselves that may emanate from that quarter, whatever course we may think fit to pursue when our friends are the subjects of their illiberal animadversions. It is to us matter of little consequence who is the editor, "Werand, the Wandering Micmac," as our correspondent calls him, or any other, their praise would be more injurious than their abuse.
