CHAPTER XXVI.

A change took place in her; she often let her work fall, and brood. She spoke sometimes sharply to Mr. Hazel, and sometimes with a rained civility. She wandered away from him, and from his labors for her comfort, and passed hours at Telegraph Point, eyeing the limitless ocean. She was a riddle. All sweetness at times, but at others irritable, moody, and scarce mistress of herself. Hazel was sorry and perplexed, and often expressed a fear she was ill. The answer was always in the negative. He did not press her, but worked on for her, hoping the mood would pass. And as it would, no doubt, if the cause had not remained.

Matters were still in this uncomfortable and mysterious state when Hazel put his finishing stroke to her abode. He was in high spirits that evening; for he had made a discovery; he had at last found time for a walk, and followed the river to its source, a very remarkable lake in a hilly basin. Near this was a pond, the water of which he had tasted and found it highly bituminous; and, making further researches, he had found at the bottom of a rocky ravine a very wonderful thing—a dark, resinous fluid bubbling up in quite a fountain, which, however, fell down again as it rose, and hardly any overflowed. It was like a thin pitch.

Of course, in another hour he was back there with a great pot, and half filled it. It was not like water—it did not bubble so high when some had been taken—so he just took what he could get. Pursuing his researches a little farther, he found a range of rocks with snowy summits apparently, but the snow was the guano of centuries. He got to the western extremity of the Island, saw another deep bay, or rather branch of the sea, and on the other side of it a tongue of high land running out to sea—on that promontory stood a gigantic palm tree. He recognized that with a certain thrill, but was in a great hurry to get home with his pot of pitch; for it was, in truth, a very remarkable discovery, though not without a parallel. He could not wait till morning, so with embers and coconuts he made a fire in the bower, and melted his pitch, which had become nearly solid, and proceeded to smear the inside of the matting in places, to make it thoroughly water-tight.

Helen treated the discovery at first with mortifying indifference; but he hoped she would appreciate Nature's bounty more when she saw the practical use of this extraordinary production. He endeavored to lead her to that view. She shook her head sorrowfully. He persisted. She met him with silence. He thought this peevish, and ungrateful to Heaven; we have all different measures of the wonderful, and to him a fountain of pitch was a thing to admire greatly and thank God for—he said as much.

To Helen it was nasty stuff, and who cares where it came from! She conveyed as much by a shrug of the shoulders, and then gave a sigh that told mind was far away.

He was a little mortified, and showed it. One word led to another, and at last what had been long fermenting, came out.

"Mr. Hazel," said she, "you and I are at cross purposes. You mean to live here—I do not."

Hazel left off working, and looked greatly perplexed, the attack was so sudden in its form, though it had been a long time threatening. He found nothing to say, and she was impatient now to speak her mind, so she replied to his look.

"You are making yourself at home here. You are contented. Contented? You are happy in this horrible prison."

"And why not?" said Hazel. "Here are no traitors—no murderers. The animals are my friends, and the one human being whom I see makes me better to look at her."

"Mr. Hazel, I am in a state of mind that romantic nonsense jars upon me. Be honest with me and talk to me like a man. I say that you beam all over with happiness and content, and that you—now answer me one question, why have you never lighted the bonfire on Telegraph Point?"

"Indeed I don't know," he said, submissively. "I have been so occupied."

"You have—and how! Not in trying to deliver us both from this dreadful situation, but to reconcile me to it." "Yes, sir, under pretense (that is a harsh word, but I can't help it) of keeping out the rain. Your rain is a bugbear; it never rains, it never will rain. You are killing yourself almost to make me comfortable in this place. Comfortable? She began to tremble all over with excitement long restrained.

"And do you really suppose you can make me live on like this by building me a nice hut? Do you think I am all body and no soul, that shelter, and warmth, and enough to eat can keep my heart from breaking, and my cheeks from blushing night and day? When I wake in the morning I find myself blushing to my finger's ends. Then she walked away from him. Then she walked back. "Oh my dear father, why did I ever leave you! Keep me here. Make me live months and years on this Island! Have you sisters? Have you a mother! Ask yourself it is likely! No; if you will not help me, and they don't love me enough to come and find me and take me home, I'll go to another home without your help or any man's." Then she rose suddenly to her feet, "I'll tie my clothes tight around me, and fling myself down from that point on to the sharp rocks below. I'll find a way from this place to Heaven, if there's no way from it to those I love on earth!"

Then she sank down and rocked herself, and sobbed hard.
