Run Of Sea Trout Behind Schedule Observers Say

The run of sea trout is behind schedule this season... a good three weeks according to observers. Be that as it may the sea-green legions are moving up in massed formation at the moment. The seasonal exodus from the briny depths is behind time this year in not days but weeks. The season is late in other ways... the countryside looks typically June-not July and maybe the trout are keeping in tune with the season. We can only guess at what governs the periodic trout movements. As a matter of fact our trout biologists have only within the past few years seriously taken up the study of trout.

For some reason or other sea trout are particularly choosy this season. Anglers have watched, with a throbbing heart and tense muscles, chunky silver sided beauties in the 4 pound bracket and over four pound streamer or other lure, making their way across it as they came, almost to their feet and then with a sweep of a powerful tail disappear with the speed of an arrow in the murky depths. Sometimes a heavy swirl will indicate a trout has taken a look-see and let it go at that.

Heavy runs are on the move in the general Murray Harbour and Cardigan districts. An angler friend of mine told me last week he tried his luck in the Seal River area (Kings County). He had hooked and landed a brace in the three quarter pound bracket when suddenly there were trout all around him... a dense school of big fellows had moved in after the shrimp. He was standing thigh deep in water at the time and he said it was a sight to behold. Shrimp were leaping from the water in all directions with the dorsal fins of big trout cutting the water like a bunch of sharks. One four or five pounder darted between his legs and threw him momentarily off balance. They were not interested in anything he had to offer and the initial pair he creeled was all he took home.

Another fisherman reported he was trying for sea trout in the Morrisons Beach area when he heard a terrific splashing behind him... a monster trout had rounded in a swift rush after shrimp. He could only guess at its weight for it managed to loop and roll to safety in deep water before the angler reached the spot. He figured it would top a set of scales at nothing under six pounds for in its wild rush seaward it stirred up a murky trail of silt and mud like as if a scow had passed that way. One thing is sure... that particular trout will steer clear of the shallows for some time.

Trout can be tantalizing at times but some excellent catches have been made nevertheless. Fishermen tell me there are a lot of trout at Milton but one has to play his cards pretty carefully to connect. The Milton trout always possessed a high I.Q. ... It's a heavily fished stream. The boys who have landed a few report they have been up for some time. An old timer who tried the Big Brook last week told me there are a lot of many big trout in a certain pool in his life. They were fresh run fish and were rolling around the pool like mad. He watched trout over 20 inches in length loop over and lie on the surface for a full second, or longer, before submerging. They wouldn't look at anything whether it was an ordinary fly, buck-tail, streamer, spinner or just plain worms.

Various estimates at the number of trout taken from the North River Causeway during the run early this spring have been given. As many as 80 anglers were there at one time but not all were catching trout. Between 800 and 1,000 during a three week period I would say is the nearest to being correct. This was given by an angler who fished it pretty consistently during the period mentioned. The trout acted differently at Vernon Bridge Causeway. There is a sandy flat above this Causeway covered by two or three feet of water at average water level. They'd take bait (worms) on this stretch like crazy for a full week. An observer told me he watched 70 anglers lined up one day and practically all were catching trout in the one pound and better class. He estimated a thousand trout were lifted from this Causeway on that day as quite a percentage of the crowd got their limit of 20.

Some people can never stop when the trout are biting in good style. I have been told that two anglers from the City discovered the fresh run in the evening and made a killing all by themselves. Apparently they were the first to discover the silvery lode. They returned early the next morning and stayed all day. They had the field to themselves for a short time before a crowd began to gather. I have it on the best of authority that on five or six occasions this particular pair stopped gravel trucks headed toward town and emptied their creels therein and that at least one truck driver dropped off grub and soft drinks for them on his return trip. No one could say just how many trout were in the creels at the time they were emptied but they were rounded out full and the pair were catching trout consistently all day. It appears to be an impossibility for some people to play the game where our trout are concerned. It could be that someone will come forward with the information that will teach a few of them a lesson that will really sink in.

IN EASTERN OPEN

Kesselring Tied For 2nd Place

BALTIMORE (AP)—Gerry Kesselring, young golfing whiz from Kitchener, Ont., held on to a share of second place Friday at the half-way mark in the 72-hole Eastern Open championship.

The 27-year-old Canadian, winner of this year's Ontario Open, made a comeback on the second nine to place three strokes behind leader Arnold Palmer, 26, of LaTrobe, Pa.

Kesselring shot a one-under-par 71 for a 36-hole total of 139, five below par. He is tied in second spot with Babe Lichardus of Hillside, N.J.

A 68 in Thursday's opening round had left Kesselring alone in second place behind John Knight of Springfield, Ill., who had 67. Knight's 73 left him tied in third with Dow Finstewald of Bedford Heights, Ohio, and Ernie Vossler of Fort Worth, Texas.

Kesselring was one over par on the first nine and had to stage a second-nine comeback. He birdied the 10th and parred the remaining holes to the 18th where another birdie kept him one under the course's par 72.

Palmer jumped into the tournament lead by steaming around the sweltering Mount Pleasant course in six-under-par 66. His opening 70 gave him an eight-under-par 136 for 72 holes.

and fighters' purses — would be raised soon, the promoters said. MAY NOT LOSE

Outside, leaning against a parked car, Dave Rush of Toronto, the man who underwrote the extravaganza, enthused: "It's getting better every minute. You know, I don't think I'll lose a cent on the production."

Earlier in the day Rush said he lost $13,000 sponsoring the outdoor bout.

"I'll tell you," he said, "I don't care about the money but I'm proud of the whole show. I'm proud because I proved to the people of Toronto that this is a big-league sports town—one of the best in the world."

Inside, the books were examined, the income-tax men left and the figures were ready to be announced.

The cop was there "just in case" someone had notions about holding up the place. Former Musician Britain's Chief Olympic Medal Hope

By KEN METHERAL Canadian Press Staff Writer LONDON (CP)—Eighteen years ago Canadian music critics hailed William Barclay Livingstone Palmer as a child prodigy.

"The family moved to England when I was seven. I was cheery, probably bronchial, and had a decided preference for the violin and games. I picked games."

Today the Toronto-born son of an English clergyman is Britain's chief hope for an Olympic shot put medal in Australia next November.

Four years later he contracted an abscess in the bones of his right ankle and doctors said he might be crippled for life. But after 14 months in bed the abscess cleared—"it was a miracle, a real miracle"—and the frail youngster began developing physically and athletically.

In the intervening years this remarkable young man of 24 has taken a theology degree at Oxford University, developed into a pianist of concert calibre, won recognition as a star at rugger, cricket, rowing, tennis and sprinting, and twice recovered from crippling physical ailments.

Palmer's ambitions? They sprout in all directions, athletically and theologically. He hopes to have a church of his own soon. But at the moment his chief ambition is to surpass the 57-foot, 6 1/2-inch European shot put record held by Jiri Skobla of Czechoslovakia.

OLYMPIC CERTAINTY

The splendidly-proportioned 246-pound athlete is rated a certainty for Britain's Olympic team although he first started heaving the 16-pound shot in earnest less than 18 months ago.

"I had played around with weight-throwing events — discuss, javelin, shot put and hammer—in the army and at Oxford," says Palmer.

"Then a little over a year ago Britain's best shot putter, John Savidge, announced his retirement. I interpreted that as a personal challenge to myself to make the Olympic team."

But I'll have to be reaching 60 feet or better to make much of a showing at Melbourne. America's Parry O'Brien had a fabulous 61 feet, four inches a few weeks ago."

At the time Palmer was recovering from a serious stomach ailment that caused friends to advise him to drop all strenuous sports. Instead the six-foot, six-inch athlete heaved the shot 46 feet to make a British team selected to compete against Germany. In this, his first international competition, he tossed the lead sphere 51 feet.

In the recent Amateur Athletic Association championships, he achieved 54 feet, two inches. "Born in Toronto, March 1932, weak and useless," says Palmer, who rattles off facts and figures with the same cannon-ball force he uses to propel the shot into a compost heap in his father's garden at Bromley, Kent, a suburban market town 11 miles southeast of London's Victoria Station.

JOHNNY SAXTON TO DEFEND TITLE

NEW YORK (AP)—Johnny Saxton of Philadelphia Thursday agreed to defend his world welterweight boxing title against Carmen Basilio, former champion, in Syracuse's War Memorial and auditorium sometime in September.

The agreement was reached in the offices of the International Boxing Club here although Norman Rothschild of Syracuse, will be co-promoter. Because Blinky Palermo, Saxton's manager, is not licensed in New York, Saxton acted for himself.

Rothschild said the bout would be televised nationally. Saxton won the title from Basilio in Chicago last March 14. Rothschild said Saxton will get 40 per cent of the gate receipts and Basilio 20 per cent.
