A Lost Faculty.

Have we lost the faculty of astonishment? Have we arrived at that stage of our development when we take wonders as matters of course? What are the seven wonders of the ancient world to the seventy and seven miracles of this golden age? It is really not fair to mention them in the same sentence. Photography, for instance, and its latest development, the instantaneous process. Only a score of years ago one had to sit perfectly still and not even wink at the peril of a distorted picture, and now you may not only wink but run, jump or fly and the camera focuses you just the same. It catches a sunbeam, the lightning's flash and the tornado's fury; a race horse with all four feet in the air, and the base ball as it curves its way towards the batsman. It is wonderful, miraculous, and, although it is not ten years old, not even a child is surprised to have his picture taken between winks.

The other day, while gazing idly in the window of a print shop, I saw a photograph of Sethi I., and another of Rameses II.—think of it! Flesh and blood 4,000 years ago, forty centuries, 120 generations, and their faces looking out at me from a bronze easel! No conjectures, no superstitious imagery, but the very lineaments as if they lay before you in the sarcophagus—what a stupendous miracle, and yet I noticed that of the twenty persons who paused to look, not one stayed to wonder.

The telegraph dates back to the birthday of a middle aged man, and even the savage Sioux regards it with indifference. The telephone is a thing of yesterday, and a boy in knee breeches picks up the 'phone and says, "give me 100," and talks to the other boy, 5, 10, 50 or more miles away with as little astonishment as if he were riding a bicycle. With the aid of a microphone, it is possible to hear a fly walk, and an invention is being perfected that will project the image of a distant object on a mirror at your elbow. The time is hastening on, when the telephone will be in every house like water and gas, and when you may not only sit in your chair at home, and converse with your friend in China, but look in his face and note every movement of his lips. Time has been annihilated and space is being rapidly conquered.

The phonograph was not even a nine days' wonder. We have seen cable cars and electric motors, and it is a green countryman who gives them a second look. Within the last decade cities have been heated with steam, and no one wondered. Natural gas burst from the bowels of the earth, and no one journeyed to see it except capitalists eager to invest. No astonishment was mixed with love of gain, and had it been ice cream or Tokay, the result would have been the same. We were not always so. We shouted in wonder at the Atlantic Cable, and flocked to see the Great Eastern. Now we might lay a cable to the moon or build a Great Western a mile long, and the only question would be, "Will it pay?" Is there anything that could or would astonish us? Ten years from date when we shoot the mails to Queenstown through a pneumatic tube in five minutes, will anyone pause to wonder? Would a flying machine astonish us?

Tasmania.

While some of us have been uttering words of warning lest the immigrants now arriving by thousands at our shores should prove something more than a God-send, the people of Tasmania have been crying out in envious indignation at our monopoly of all the mother country's surplus labor. Our fellow-colonists in that distant portion of the Queen's dominions cannot understand why a perfect garden, as they consider Tasmania, should be unoccupied to a great extent while hundreds of families are being sent out to settle in Canada. They contend that Tasmania thus requires to be known to be appreciated, that there is no more fertile colony in the Empire, and that no industrious man need be at a loss for a living while he has Tasmania to go to. The press of the country has called upon the Government to take the necessary steps to induce the immigration of British farmers and laborers. The Scotch crofters are especially invited. Not many years ago we made a similar complaint when the tide of immigration was passing our own doors. It took many years to convince the people of the United Kingdom that Canada offered advantages to the settler quite equal to those of the United States.

Your Destiny.

According to almost all the charts gotten up by the astrologists, what may be expected of girls born in different months is about as follows:

If in January, a prudent housewife, given to melancholy, but good tempered.

If in February, a human and affectionate wife and tender mother.

If in March, a frivolous chatter-box, somewhat given to quarrelling.

If in April, inconstant, not very intelligent but likely to be good-looking.

If in May, handsome, amiable and be likely to be happy.

If in June, impetuous, will marry early and be frivolous.

If in July, passably handsome, but with a sulky temper.

If in August, amiable and practical and likely to marry rich.

If in September, discreet, affable and much liked.

If in October, pretty and coquettish, and likely to be unhappy.

If in November, liberal, kind and of a wild disposition.

If in December, well proportioned, fond of novelty and extravagant.

Kate Fox, the Original Spirit Rapper,

SEEKING OTHER SPIRITUAL CONSOLATION.

A New York despatch reports that Mrs. Kate Fox Jenckin, aged 50, of No. 158 East 84th street, was arraigned in the Harlem Police Court on the 4th inst., charged by an agent of the society for the prevention of crueity to children, with failing to take proper care of her two sons, aged 13 and 12. Mrs. Jenckin is one of the Fox sisters, the original spirit rappers who commenced their career in Rochester 30 years ago, and who afterwards travelled over the world astonishing all who attended their seances. Mrs. Jenckin's husband, who has been dead for some years, was an eminent English barrister. Of late Mrs. Jenckin is said to have been given to intemperate habits, and her children have suffered. She was held in $300 bail to answer, and the children were committed to the Juvenile Asylum. Mrs. Jenckin said to a reporter that she has not lost her powers, although her poverty and misfortunes had interfered with their exercise. She said Luther B. Marsh had called upon her frequently for consolation since Mrs. Diss DeBar's incarceration in the Tombs, but by the advice of her counsel she had refused to see him. The once talented, vivacious and successful spirit rapper is now a total wreck.

Romance and Mystery.

Mrs. Lawrence Corcoran, of South Orange, New Jersey, is shortly going to London to endeavor to establish her claim to some £300,000 left as the residuary estate of a Mrs. Blake. The circumstances of the case are very romantic. In the town of Ballow, County Longford, Ireland, lived Nellie Sheridan. Her beauty captivated General Robert Dudley Blake, of the English army and member of a great and prominent family. Leaving the army, he took Nellie to Scotland and married her. The Blakes disowned him; and thereupon the General, wealthy in his own right, took his bride to America, and established a large millinery business in Mansfield, Ohio. Many years ago he died while in England, leaving all his possessions to his wife.

Mrs. Blake was shunned by the General's family, and some years ago she died childless at South Kensington. Mr. Robert Gun, of 6, Prince of Wales Road, Kentish Town, an agent concerned concerned in the case, informs us that she also died intestate. Her wealth would therefore go to her nearest relatives. But the difficulty occurred as to whom her relatives were, for although she lived at Ballow it was by no means certain that she was born there. The registration books all over the United Kingdom have been searched in vain for any record of her birth, while inquiries on a large scale have also been made in foreign parts. Some of her acquaintances allege that she was born at sea, but her maiden name of Sheridan seems to indicate that she was of Irish birth. It was only about half a century ago that the compulsory registration law came into operation, and this may account for the apparent non-registration.

Mrs. Lawrence Corcoran, however, alleges that she was a first cousin of Mrs. Blake, and that she can prove it. She says her maiden name was Feeney, and that her native place was Adgerton, County Longford. Two years ago she and her husband were informed that she was heiress to a large sum. The Corcorans were in very poor circumstances, and their friends regarded the matter as a huge joke, but the husband converted much of his meagre possessions into cash, and accompanied his wife to Matawan, where detailed information was obtained which the Corcorans think will establise their claim.

Mares' Defense Against Wolves.

When in the Asturias, says a correspondent in Nature, in 1885, I was told of a very curious case of animal instinct, which may be worth recording. Wolves are by no means infrequent in the Asturias, and often attack the young foals which are sent up to pasturage with the mares in the mountains. The danger experienced seems to have begotten a precautionary instinct of a very intelligent kind. It is said that, on an alarm of wolves, the mares and foals congregate for mutual protection and common defense. The mares form themselves into a sort of cordon, heads outwards, surrounding a space inclosing the young foals, and are ready for attacking with their forefeet the wolves on their approach.

My informant gave me a graphic account of such an attack, of which he was an eyewitness for nearly an hour, and described to me how the wolves circled round and round the defenders, first at some distance, then gradually approaching nearer and nearer, seeking an opening into the inclosure, till at last they came within striking distance, and he saw one wolf rolled over dead by a blow from the forefoot of one of the mares.

The forefoot is not commonly used for defense by an equine species; but it is obvious that the more powerful hind leg blow would be of little service against the spring of a wolf from behind, without the directing eye to guide the stroke. What a long experience must this mutual protection have been the result of! We can scarcely understand it, without councils of war having been held, the danger discussed, and signals for concerted action arranged; but now all this instinct may merely be the inheritance of the experience of former generations.
