

World Food Production Is Up But Farm Income Down

ROME (AP) — World farm production is up three per cent compared with last year, but prices are down and so is farm income, the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization reported Monday.

The FAO said the consumer is in the middle — benefiting little. Its annual report on the state of food and agriculture, issued by the FAO's headquarters here, said that in the United States, for example, the marketing margin for retail food sales increases three per cent in the first quarter of 1956, against the first quarter of 1955.

The marketing margin is the spread between what the farmer gets and the consumer pays. The FAO, formed 11 years ago to improve the world food situation, summed up the problems of world agriculture this way:

"The basic dilemma of most governments is how to reconcile their dual responsibilities to maintain the economic position of farmers and at the same time to provide consumers with adequate food supplies at low prices."

ANXIETY CONTINUES

"In spite of the added urgency caused by surplus stocks, only a beginning has so far been made toward reducing production and marketing costs in order to bring more and better food within the reach of the poorer consumer."

The FAO said "the deteriorating position of the farm population continues to cause anxiety," adding:

"Prices have continued to move against the farmer in most countries, although in Europe prices of livestock products have been maintained.

"The prices of important farm requisites (what the farmer buys) have risen in nearly all countries.

"Farm incomes appeared generally to have declined between 1951 and 1955 or, at best, to have made only very limited gains in sharp contrast to the rising trend of incomes in other occupations."
