Behring Sea Court.

THE AMERICAN SIDE OF THE CASE BEING GRADUALLY TORN TO PIECES.

According to a late Paris despatch, Sir Charles Russell resumed consideration of the diplomatic correspondence in connection with the treaties of 1824 '25, on Wednesday.

Replving to Mr. Harlan, commissioner for the United States, he said that the ukase and charter issued by Russia clearly intended before 1825 the exclusion of foreigners from Behring Sea. But there was a change after the diplomatic correspondence. The renewals of the charter after the treaty of 1825 did not confer privileges on Russian subjects that were denied to foreigners. It only conferred on some Russian subjects privileges which were exclusive as against other Russian subjects.

He traced the ground of the whaling industry, and referred to the appeal made by the Russian governor of Alaska in 1842, and of the governor of Siberia in 1847 for protection against foreign intrusion. Those requests from Russian subjects were met by the refusal of the Russian government.

The Russian ministry at that time gave the reason that such interference in Behring Sea would contravene treaty stipulations. Sir Charles Russell quoted the cases of the American ship Loriot in 1837. This action of the American authorities was met with United States protests on the lines now asserted by Great Britain.

Sir Charles repeated Carter's statement that Russia had never asserted territorial jurisdiction over Behring Sea, quoting ukase and charter to show that the authority was asserted, though it was never enforced.

In confirmation of the British contention that the scope of the submission to the present board of arbitration is limited to Behring Sea, he quoted the letter written by United States Assistant Secretary Wharton after the signature of the treaty.

This letter defined the controversy to be as follows: "Have the Americans the exclusive right to take seals in the eastern part of Behring sea, or have the British sealers common privileges outside three mile limit?" Sir Charles contended that the American claim to have a right to protect seals on the high sea necessarily involved the territorial dominion which America now repudiated.

[Funeral from her late residence, Easton St., to People's Cemetery on Saturday at 10 a. m.]

At Murray Harbor South, on Saturday, May 13th, Thomas Machon, aged 86 years. Mr. Machon was the son of Daniel Machon, who emigrated from Guernsey, Channel Islands, to this Island in the year 1806.

He enjoyed a peculiarly healthy life, having never been sick until a few days before his death, retaining all his faculties to the last. He lived a consistent Christian life and for over fifty years was an active member of the Methodist Church. None spoke of him without words of praise. The funeral took place on Tuesday, May 16th, from the residence of his son, Henry Machon, and was very largely attended. The services were conducted by the Rev. H. W. Spargo, assisted by the Rev. Ewen Gillies, pastors of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches respectively, and the interment was in the Murray Harbor South cemetery.
