POETRY.

THEY SAY.
They say—ah! well, suppose they do?
But can they prove the story true?
Suspicion may arise from naught
But malice, envy, want of thought;
Why count yourself among "the they?"
Why whisper what they dare not say?

They say—but why the tale rehearse,
And help to make the matter worse?
No good can possibly accrue
From telling what may be untrue?
And is it not a nobler plan
To speak of all the best you can?

They say—well, if it should be so,
Why need you tell the tale of woe?
Will it the bitter wrong redress,
Or make one pang of sorrow less?
Will it the erring one restore,
Henceforth to "go and sin no more?"

They say—ah! pause and look within!
See how time dark inclines to sin!
Watch, lest in heart temptation's hour
Thou too shouldst sink beneath its power!
Flee the frail, peer e'er their fall,
But speak of good, or not at all!

THE CRUCIFIXION.

Overwhelmed in grief of woe,
Upon the tree of scorn
Hange the Redeemer of mankind,
With racking anguish torn.
See! how the nails those hands
And feet to tender rend!

See! down his face, and neck, and breast,
His sacred blood descend.
Shall man alone be mute?
Come, youth! and wail his fate!
Come, rich and poor! to feel his pain,
And bathe those feet in tears.

Come! fall before his Cross,
Who shed for us his blood!
Who died the victim of pure love,
To make us sons of God.

Jesus! all praise to Thee,
Our joy and endless rest!
Be thou our guide while pilgrims here,
Our crown amid the blest.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

We are told by Paris correspondents that the adventurous visitor who, at this time, essay to make his way through the vast and noisy chaos of the Champ de Mars, is equally impressed with a sense of wondering admiration of the vastness and splendour of the coming Exhibition, and the seeming impossibility of its being ready at the appointed time. The special correspondent of the Toronto Globe remarks—

"The entire enclosure, ground and buildings, resound with the hum of voices, the creaking of steam-cranes, the snorting and puffing of steam-engines, the rumbling of locomotives, and the miscellaneous din of masons, carpenters and plasterers. The main building—a vast circular gallery, roofed with corrugated iron, and arched by the Emperor, on his return from Compiegne, to look like a huge gasometer—is finished as far as regards its principal lines of wall; but even here, very little has been done in matters of detail. The French and English departments are the most advanced; and the stands of exhibitors are beginning to rise, like castles in the air, and are destined to show the progress of the subterranean railway below the flooring, and the passage of rafters and girders which are being converted into supplementary galleries overhead; enormous masses of cases and packages meet the eye in every direction; every here and there a little group is busy surveying the masses of King's Company, destined to protect delicate objects to be hereafter unpacked in their turn. The French and English towns have already got most of their signs into place; most of the great British dependencies have also reached this point of development. The Mauritius, North and South Australia, and the Cape of Good Hope are indicated by signs and placards, with colours and gilding. But India has not as yet a bit of board, on which some benevolent hand has traced the name of our great Eastern Empire with the aid of pen and ink; while the bare, green-gay walls of Canada, the West Indies, &c., afford, as yet, not the faintest indication of their respective countries. The other countries of the poor Artemus Ward would have expressed it, but that he has just passed away, a telegram from London tells us, from the scene of his 'toaks'—are just in the same elementary condition, only 'more so.'

"The vast Park" outside the main building is rapidly filled with edifices of every size, style and destination. It is not a village, but a town, that is springing up, as the result of this amazing orgie of brick and mortar. Every nation whose products are exhibited within the "gasometer" has a settlement in the Park, and is busily erecting therein models of its peculiar style of habitation, workshops, churches, palaces, dairies, stables, farm-houses, shops, &c. The Russian village, the nearest completion, and already, with its charming cottages and farm-buildings of hewn logs, lavishly ornamented with wooden carvings and open work, looks extremely picturesque. Holland is also getting its village rapidly in order, and expects to make a good show of the matter by the sale of a fine milk of Dutch cattle in the open market daily. Tunis is building a model of the palace of the Bey, with shops in which native artisans will ply their respective trades in their usual fashion. Egypt is building two or three pyramids, a model of the Temple of Memphis, and several other samples of its peculiar architecture. The Isthmus of Suez Company is putting up a great, mysterious-looking building, imitating, on a small scale, one of the palaces of the Pharaohs—a low, flat-roofed, windowless structure, lighted from above, and surrounded by an imposing line of columns of the Sarcenic style. China is less forward, but promises, among other specimens of the domestic being and things of the Flowery Land, a tea-shop, in which smelted, almond-eyed hours, from beyond the Great Wall, will dispense to outside barbarians the beverage which inspires but not subdues, in tiny cups, guiltless of hand-icuffs.

"The jumbling of materials and the fragmentary state of everything in and about the 'gasometer,' often produces effects sufficiently whimsical. Here is a group of children in bronze, evidently meant to support a fountain; on a pedestal, stand three logs of what is to be a colossal horse; yonder, on a towering crucifix, is a figure of the Saviour, the protuberant portions showing through swaths of hay. Here is a pile of gaily painted poles for ordonnances; there the vague revelation, through enveloping draperies, of a female statue in a tragic attitude.

"An international theatre, a post office, with a large and capital staff, an international club-house, basin, a set of two restaurants and an infinity of other entertainments are also getting ready.

A Frenchman has built a beautiful little church, which will serve mainly for the showing off of stained glass windows; and two churches, built by England, will edify all who desire to instruct themselves in the forms of worship used by the Anglican rite, and by the followers of John Wesley. A colossal light-house, intended for Dover, towers above everything else, though two or three great chimneys rise almost as high.

"Outside the grounds, the choice of the Champ de Mars, as the site of the Exhibition has caused a change in the aspect of the entire neighborhood as considerable as that which is being wrought within. The bank of the river is loaded with goods, materials and packages of all kinds, lited out of barges and river steamers by a gigantic crane, and conveyed into the main building by an underground railway. Crowds of spectators are gathered at every point commanding a view of what is going on inside of the enclosure; long rows of vehicles, which are drawn up along the quay, awaiting the return of the visitors who have brought; groups of commissioners and exhibitors are going to and fro in earnest consultation, with rolls of paper in their hands.

"Meaning, Brompton wilderness to the west, to the south and rapidly filling up with rows of handsome houses, which are being furnished almost before the builders are out of them, which it is hoped will be foreign visitors. The city of Paris is being built up long from garret to garret by foreign visitors.

"It is quite evident that the great show, when completed, will be the most stupendous and magnificent affair that the world has yet seen; yet equally certain that it will afford no single iota of comfort to the poor, who are created by the unvaried prospectives of the royal palace of 1851."

HOW TO GROW AND MANUFACTURE FLAX SEED.

It has been my lot to attend a very large number of farms in Canada where flax was exhibited, and I have not seen any like that which came under my notice in Ireland. Flax seems to grow well in Canada, but our farmers are not yet acquainted with the manufacturing of it. In this letter I propose giving you a brief description of the mode adopted by some growers in the Old Country, and in the prospect of which I have been engaged for many years.

As almost every farmer is aware, the seed is sown broadcast the same as other grains, it grows best in warm land or rich soil. When it is about six or nine inches high, it would do good to roll it well; this should be done after a soft day or shower of rain. When the bloom goes off it, and the seed begins to assume a yellowish tinge, it is time to pull it. I cannot remember the mode of harvesting flax in Canada so far as cutting with machinery is concerned, is one-half so beneficial to the fibre as the Old Country fashion of pulling up straight by the roots with the hands. When pulled and tied in small bundles, the same as other grain, it should be taken to the mill as soon as possible. The way to know when it is ready for cutting is to pull it up straight by the roots with the hands. When pulled and tied in small bundles, the same as other grain, it should be taken to the mill as soon as possible.

The flax should be pulled up straight by the roots with the hands. When pulled and tied in small bundles, the same as other grain, it should be taken to the mill as soon as possible.
