HAS GIVEN UP HOPES.—The Moncton Transcript says:—A relative of John E. Sullivan who recently visited the condemned man in his cell at Dorchester, says that John has practically given up all hope of having his sentence commuted and now seems willing to meet the inevitable. He has no broken down in the least and the relative says that from what John says he is not to let on that he will walk to the scaffold with that apparent stolid indifference that has characterized him throughout his trial. The Transcript's informant further reported John as having given utterance to the following remarks: "People may think that an affair to die. That is not so. All that at present worries me is my poor mother and my family. It is them that I am sorry for and not for myself. I have only to die once and I may as well die now as any other time. THE ENTERTAINMENT OF LAST EVENING.

If we mistake not the entertainment of last evening was the first that has been given in this city under the management of Miss Mellich. Notwithstanding many difficulties and some untoward circumstances it proved to be, upon the whole, very acceptable and enjoyable. The heat of the hall throughout the evening was much too great for the comfort of the audience and it was a serious hindrance to the musicians and other performers. But the entertainment progressed smoothly and successfully nevertheless, until late in the evening the heat and the smoke from the furnace caused an alarm of "fire" to be raised. We suggest that the management of the hall procure a thermometer, and, in future, maintain an even temperature at something less than 90 degrees.

The entertainment combined in a pleasing manner three prominent features,—the spectacular, the elocutionary and the musical. Of the first it may be said that "the doll drill" and "the muster of the mail-order" were exceedingly pretty and interesting. The little mothers and their elder sisters alike performed their evolutions with grace and precision, and gave great pleasure to the audience. Miss Helen McDonald portrayed the various feelings and passions of humanity in a manner that was altogether admirable; and Miss McMahon strikingly impersonated Sir Henry Irving,—both young ladies being rewarded by rounds of applause. The grouping of the living pictures, presented under the direction of Mr. W. C. Harris, was artistic to a degree, and the effect produced highly pleasing. Under the heading of the elocutionary are to be classed the recitation of "The Rained Clouds," which Mr. T. J. Harris made with great credit upon those who took part in it. The musical portion of the programme was opened by Miss Russell and Professor Earle, who played with appreciation and excellent interpretation an overture from Zampa. The return of Master Charles Earle to the musical stage was marked by hearty applause and an encore of his capital song, "True to the Last." It is pleasing to note that "Charlie" as a young gentleman has made a noble record in the history of his school days. Miss Cotton, at short notice, filled the gap caused by the inability of Miss Lillian Dodd to be present, singing a beautiful song in a manner that was, as the Guardian remarks, "highly acceptable." The quartette by Mrs. Hodgson, Miss Cotton, Rev. T. H. Hunt and Mr. J. Owen was admirable, and the instrumental sextette in brass was a capital number. Miss Phoebe Large and Miss Gwendoline Welsh both made their first public appearance at the Opera House as musicians and both performed creditably,—the first giving a violin solo and the last a cornet solo. It is pleasing to note that the talents of many of our ladies and gentlemen are employed in the cultivation of the arts; and we think that Miss Mellich is to be congratulated on the new ability that she has introduced to the public, as well as upon the general success of her first entertainment.

OH! AIN'T IT FUNNY.

How elastic some advertisers can make their imaginative proclivities. How they can imagine all kinds of things—imagine they are busy when they are doing nothing; imagine their store is crowded when two customers happen to strike the shop at one time; imagine they are selling goods like hot cakes when in reality they are only cutting up goods getting them ready for some of their periodical remnant sales; imagine because they have a large store that they should mimic Wanamaker—But there are one or two things they cannot imagine, and one of them is they cannot imagine how we sell Goods so cheaply; and another thing is they cannot imagine how we do such a tremendous trade in Hats, Clothing and Carpets; and they cannot do what they like, take the trade away from us, but find our business increasing year by year.

On the Death of Adlie E. Dugwell, Who Departed This Life Feb. 9th, 1897.

You must leave us, dearest Addie, Like a rosebud in its bloom; You will leave us here so lonely To weep over thy tomb.

Heck! she calls her loving father, "Come and sit beside my bed; Oh, I feel my strength is going, Father, raise my sinking head."

Foolly in his arms he raised her. "Father, help me, quick," she cried. "Lay me down; I feel I'm going." "Christ the law has magnified."

The fond mother feels it keenly, Finding no relief in tears; Standing by the one she cherished—Joy of her declining years.

Who can paint the grief and anguish—Rending that poor mother's heart, Gazing on her form so lovely, Called so soon from her to part?

When her brothers gathered round her Burning tears their anguish told; Soon the one who loves them dearly Will be called to her long home.

All her brothers' love and pity Cannot now her health restore, Though their hearts should burst with anguish, Pressed with sorrow to the core.

Fondly talked she of her brothers, Who, in foreign land that day, Did not see her in her sufferings, But did not forget to pray.

Death has fixed on her his arrow, He has marked her for his prey In her youth and strength and beauty, Doomed to mingle with the clay.
