Roads Clogged By Seven Inches

Following the dumping of some six to seven inches of snow on Prince Edward Island by the weather last night, reports were received that clogged roads on all sections of the province.

Plows which had been working through the early part of the storm were called in about mid-evening, due to poor visibility and drifting. Late indications from the plow dispatcher at Charlottetown, was that the plows were being maintained on a standby basis, following the reports that heavier winds fell.

Last night the RCMP issued a warning that most highways in the province were slippery under the new coating of snow, with fairly heavy drifts to be encountered in some sections.

During the heaviest period of the snowfall, the police reported that some 24 automobiles were involved in traffic accidents of a minor nature, as the result of low visibility and drifting.

Most of the accidents, which involved very little property damage, were caused by the occupants of injury to any of the occupants.

At midnight the temperature was reported at 24 degrees, and had been in that vicinity for close to two hours. With the province still under the influence of the tailend of the disturbance, the temperature was expected to rise a little above that level before starting to drop toward the expected low of 18 degrees.

With the passing of the disturbance, islanders were promised that during today they would be able to enjoy a few frequent glimpses of the sun, but that there will be some cloudy periods and occasional snowflurries.

The mercury is forecast to remain in the mid-20s, with a really climbing to 33 degrees. Today's winds are forecast to blow from the northwest at 25 gusting to 45 m.p.h.

A PLEASANT interlude in an otherwise busy time" was the Premier Walter Shaw described the 25th anniversary party of the Charlottetown Kinsmen Club. Here the Premier is chatting with a group at the head table which includes H. Rogers, Toronto (second from right), the founder of the Kinsmen Club of Canada, On the right is Kenneth Yeo, president of the Charlottetown Club.

Influence Of Kinsmen Seen In Unifying Factor

"If you could carry the thought of Kin all over the world, what a wonderful influence for peace it would be," Premier Walter Shaw said as he addressed a dinner meeting of the Charlottetown Kinsmen Club Saturday night at the Charlottetown Club.

The Kinsmen were celebrating the 25th anniversary of the club in 1938 when they received their club charter and here to help celebrate was H.A. Rogers, Hamilton, Ont., who founded the organization.

On hand was a strong representation of charter members, with as many past presidents as with the charter president, George Ayers making what he termed the first incision on the huge three-tiered birthday cake with a ceremonial sword.

Terminating the party "a pleasant interlude in an otherwise busy time," Premier Shaw spoke briefly about the crowded dining hall "whether we talk the same language or not, but it comes from our hearts that makes us kin."

UNIFYING FACTOR

"Founder Hall," as he is affectionately known by Kinsmen, is a building which stands as a standing ovation when he was introduced and sustained applause greeted his brief talk on the founding and development of Kinsmanship. He termed it as "the young man's organization founded on fellowship" and said that fled away at Ottawa, where plans for coordinating the work of all service clubs in the event of another war.

Mr. Rogers in recalling the great work of Kinsmen in the war years noted, the easy return to the peacetime life of finding the greatest need of the community and working with the people of the community to fulfill that need."

DR. MARK MACGIGAN (centre) of the faculty of Law, University of Toronto, was the speaker today at a rally yesterday sponsored by St. Dunstan's University members of the Canadian Federation of Catholic College Students, Dr.

MacGigan's lecture on the State's role in the economy, was the topic of an address which concluded a Canadian Federation of Catholic College Students' rally, held at St. Dunstan's University yesterday afternoon and evening.

The lecture, one of several at the rally dealing with academic freedom in relation to the state, was given by Dr. Mark MacGigan, of the faculty of law of the University of Toronto.

MacGigan said the state, through legislation, restricts freedom of choice, but should have the purpose of expanding freedom of perfection. The latter freedom Dr. MacGigan defined as being the liberty that accompanies doing the right thing, while freedom of choice, he stated, is the liberty to do whatever one pleases.

In creating the conditions which make freedom of perfection possible, the state should play a positive role with regard to the material freedoms, such as the right to private property.
