

Dear Editor,

Here are a few choice observations from last week's X-Press (Nov. 19, 1992) from two local superheroes:

Whether you are for or against the fixed link, it is inevitable that technology will reach such a "back-arsed" province as E.I., eh?

Who really gives a crap if Rick Tocchet can pummel Rob Pearson? Why don't all of you who are actually concerned with this subject go to the Olduvai Gorge, dig around in the dirt, and see if you can find the missing link in your family tree.

Chris's Review of Imagnus. Hey man, you have a real bum's eye for art! Monet, Degas, Renoir, Matisse, and others too numerous to mention -- it's called real art, deal with it, haole!

S. Livingstone: Hurray Stan, you are the man! Great articles!

Sean McQuaid, writer of Comicolumn, is it lonely on your planet? Come back to the real world and find something relevant to do!

Engineering Society News: Witty column Cro-Magnons! It's called evolution, try it!
Signed,

Black Lightning and Rico Suave

Dear Editor,

Is it fear of "rejection" or of a "relationship"? Well Jack, I almost did it. I told the guy I needed to tell him something. Can you believe he didn't want to know what I had to say and then decided he did. To save face (or to ward off rejection) I told him to forget it, told him I had to leave, and I walked off the dance floor and went home.

Enough is enough! I guess there comes a time when you have to let go and now's my time. I wasn't rejected but what would be the sense of putting myself through it if it came to that? Knowing me, if he would have welcomed me back with open arms, I would have run the other way anyway!

Scared of a real, final, lasting, relationship, am I? Maybe it's not rejection I fear!

I would like it very much, if you, the students of the university, would consider me for Senate Rep. I consider me for Senate Rep.
