Education Of Nurses Must Keep Up With Med. Science

ROME (CP)—A Toronto nursing educationist told the International Council of Nurses' Congress today that Canadian nursing education is not keeping pace with the advances of medical science.

Nursing has increased in content and complexity, said Helen Carpenter, assistant professor at the University of Toronto's School of Nursing. But it was still struggling with 19th-century methods in a 20th-century world.

Most of Canada's nursing schools were operated by hospitals which required a lot of services from the student nurses while they trained.

"This arrangement creates a conflict and weakens the educational experience of the students," she said.

NEED FREEDOM

"The chief problem facing the nursing profession in Canada is to secure the opportunity for students to learn to nurse with freedom, while they are students, from responsibility for meeting the hospitals' needs for nursing service...."

Brampton Farmwoman Learn Lot At U. N. General Assembly

By MARY BURKE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

TORONTO (CP) — A 14-hour working day is not unusual for Mrs. J. E. Houck, a 62-year-old grandmother whose activities cover a wide field.

In 1956 she was the only Canadian woman delegate to the United Nations general assembly. As a UN member, among the many things she learned was that "the finest civilization isn't necessarily ours and that there can be five sides to a question."

Living on a farm at Brampton, Ont., with her husband and son Bill, doesn't hinder Mrs. Houck. She enjoys her role of housewife, mother and business woman.

LOVES FARM LIFE

A small woman with flashing grey eyes and a cheery disposition, Mrs. Houck loves farm life. She says she can't afford to diet as she burns up energy as fast as she produces it.

Mrs. Houck, who is chairman of the YWCA extension service, will attend the YWCA 20th quadrennial convention which opens in Vancouver, June 2-8.

Her association with the Toronto Y started in the Second World War when Mr. Houck was assigned to the farm service committee. Mrs. Houck has also been in Women's Institute work for 30 years. She is a former executive officer on both Ontario and national WI boards.

Mrs. Houck along with Mrs. J. L. Savage and Dr. Marion Hillard of Toronto; Prof. Isobel Laird, Queen's University, Kingston, Ont.; and Miss Marion Royce of the department of labor, Ottawa, will form a panel at the YWCA convention to discuss "future fashions in thinking for generations to come."

A native of Wisconsin, Mrs. Houck became a naturalized Canadian in 1928. She and her husband are graduates of Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. Between 1945 and 1949 she was a member of the Hope Commission on education in Ontario. She was also appointed in 1956 to a three year term as a governor of the CBC.

MOST REWARDING JOB

Mrs. Houck frowns on the woman who says "I'm just a housewife" in a tone that indicates there is no position more lowly or insignificant.

Being a good housewife and an inspiring mother is the most rewarding job belonging to women, Mrs. Houck says.

"There has been too much old-fashioned talk and too much silly sentiment on what really constitutes a top notch mother."

Her advice to women is to try to be with their children, but she says "it's more important how you spend your time with your family than how long."

With more spare time today, Mrs. Houck wishes women would take an interest in international give to community affairs.

"Not enough women are interested in politics," she says. "This is due to laziness, habit and the attitude of husbands who loathe having their wives out in the hurly-burly of political life."

Cleaning's No Problem With New Ranges, Ovens

By ELEANOR ROSS

Gas stove designers have at last taken the kitchen clean-up problems of the American housewife to heart. The result is that the new ranges and ovens are built more or less like jigsaw puzzles. Their neatly-fitted parts can easily be lifted out to give the housewife the opportunity to wash them in hot soap or detergent suds and rinses at the sink, the place where grease and food stains can be removed with a minimum of effort.

RESTYLED PARTS

Parts that can't be removed have been restyled to simplify cleaning. Corners have been rounded for easier swabbing and unnecessary ridges have been eliminated. So have the dirt-catching crevices that formerly had to be cleaned by digging into them with a small brush or even a toothpick.

Ovens, especially, have been improved. Moreover, it seems fairly clear that the improvements came from designers who left their drawing boards long enough to work in the kitchen and see just what housewives were up against.

One new wall oven even has a door that lifts off entirely to give easy access to the porcelain-lined interior which should be swabbed down entirely with a sudsy cloth as soon as the oven is cooled.

OTHER FEATURES

Other ovens feature glass windows that can be lifted out to facilitate sudsing off every bit of the grease film that obscures visibility. Still others have eliminated the side ridges in oven walls and replaced them with removable rack attachments that can be washed in the sink along with the racks themselves.

One manufacturer has installed check up. Mrs. O'Brien underwent a serious operation some time ago.

Mrs. Sadie MacDonald, who has been very seriously ill in the Charlotetown Hospital, is slowly improving.

The regular meeting and election of officers for the new year of the Little Flower Division of the C.W.L. was held last week. Following the meeting the members were treated to an inspiring talk by the pastor Fr. Robin.

Mrs. Herb Kenny and son Ken were business visitors to the city last week.

Word has been received here from Mr. Bill McKenna, Lynn, Mass., that he has returned to his good health again after a serious illness and returned to work. Bill visited here several times when his brother Rev. P. McKenna was P.P. here.

A removable aluminum oven tray lifts off as a single unit for washing to catch stray drops of juice and other foods that fall to the bottom of the oven.

A number of new range models now have oven floors that can be removed for easier scrubbing. Some of them also feature one-piece chrome linings that are stain-and-acid resistant.

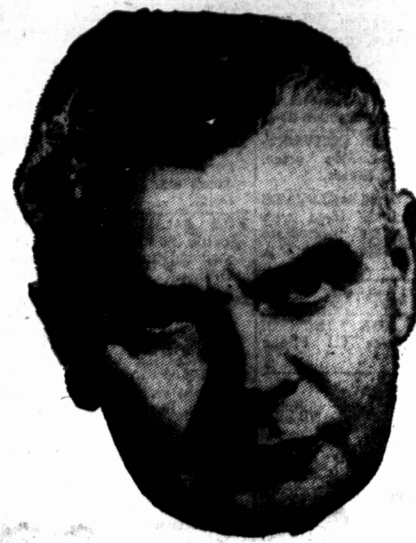

Stove tops have been redesigned for quicker and more thorough cleaning.

One gas range has a top that signs cut down on needless that only serve to accumulate grime.

One designer was obviously anxious to eliminate even hidden dirt. His contribution to kitchen cleanliness is a bottom-of-the-range storage drawer that comes out, giving the housewife room to literally crawl into the stove to scrub the floor beneath it!

But whether new or not, the cookstove should always be kept in tiptop sanitary condition. Anything that food contacts must be kept spotless. With the lovely pastel colors that stoves are sporting these days, it's a pleasure rather than a chore to keep them spotless. If the stove isn't colorful, then it must rely for beauty on a bright, shining surface.
