science

Science is "knowing how." The only secret about Scott's Emulsion is years of science. When made in large quantities and by improving methods, an emulsion must be more perfect than when made in the old-time way with mortar and pestle a few ounces at a time. This is why Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil never separates, keeps sweet for years, and why every spoonful is equal to every other spoonful. An even product throughout.

In other emulsions you are liable to get an uneven benefit—either an over or under dose. Get Scott's. Genuine has a salmon-colored wrapper.

GODFREY'S WHITE QUEEN.

BY EDWARD RAYMOND.

CHAPTER IV.

Summer had glided into autumn; the earth, bereft of her golden corn, replaced the color in hedge and tree, and the dews fell heavily night and morning.

One night, about nine o'clock, Godfrey Neville arrived at Lealstone Hall.

The evening was very hot and steamy. Mrs. Neville and Audine were sitting together—the French windows open. Audine had a book on her lap, which she was trying to read, but she had been very busy all day, and her eyes would close of themselves; and after resisting for a while, the book silently slid to the ground, and her head sank back on her low arm-chair, and she slept. There was no ring at the bell, no knock or sound of servants hurrying, but pushing open the half-closed window, Godfrey Neville came in.

Mrs. Neville sprang to her feet, surprised and started; but he put his finger on his lip, and beckoned to her not to awake Audine, but to come out to him. She glanced at her thin shoes and the wet grass; but there was something in his manner which frightened her, and she followed him without remonstrance.

Audine, undisturbed, slept on for more than an hour, then suddenly woke up with a feeling of consciousness that somebody was looking at her, close to her, bending over her. She raised herself suddenly. Yes! some one was quite close to her—a dark figure; it was very dark now, and the servants had not brought the lights. She could see nothing but an outline, and could almost have screamed when she fancied she recognized the satyr-like face of Castaletti. "Hush!" he said, very softly "Do not speak. I am satisfied he is not here."

"Who is not here? What do you mean?" Audine rose to her feet, trembling violently.

"He—Godfrey."

"No; he has not been here for many weeks—months even. Let me call aunt Mary," she exclaimed in terror, for he caught hold of her hands.

"No, no. I want to tell you Godfrey has a bride already—a perfect bride—a rare piece of perfection; you are to know that."

"Let me go."

"Yes, yes; but remember there is no perfection like his bride, and he is hers—do you hear, Audine? He is mad, and he has wed her." She shook from head to foot. He continued holding her hands, and speaking in the same loud rapid whisper.

"Yes; she is very beautiful, this White Queen,—Hera come down from heaven. I shall come again, Audine; I have not finished my work yet. But I tell you this, that you may know when the time comes—he has a bride already."

"Yes, yes," she gasped. He let go her hands, and went toward the door. Audine leant against the wall, half fainting with fear. He turned back suddenly, and repeated—

"I am coming back, Audine, very soon. I cannot understand Godfrey's madness; but it is true, and we all know that he is mad."

And he was gone. Audine rang the bell violently—the butler came.

"Where is Mrs. Neville?" she said.

"Mrs. Neville and Mr. Godfrey are in the garden, ma'am."

"Is that strange gentleman gone?"

"Yes, ma'am: he has gone. I told him that I had just seen Mrs. Neville in the garden, but he did not go there."

"And you say Mr. Godfrey has come?"

The man looked surprised. "Yes; about an hour ago, ma'am: Mr. Godfrey went round by the garden window."

"Ah! Will you tell Mrs. Burns I want to speak to her. I am going upstairs, and if Mrs. Neville asks for me, say I would not disturb her as Mr. Godfrey had arrived."

The butler called Audine's nurse, who was astonished to find that her young lady could hardly stand, and that she was almost too frightened to speak. She took her upstairs, and sat by her half the night, till her violent trembling had ceased.

Castaletti left the house by the gate which led on to the moor. It was quite dark now, and the whole country was illuminated by the blazing furnaces. On the horizon glared the great open chimneys of Anchester iron-works, vomiting out flames and black smoke; on every side burning lights, athwart which towered the tall chimneys; and the air was full of the hum of never-ceasing machinery; the whistles of engines slowly dragging their heavy loads up the steep incline; the busy rush of the trucks as they sped downwards again, and the rattling of the iron ropes as they rushed over the wheels.

Lealstone lay in the hollow beneath. The road to it lay parallel with the boundary of the park; but Castaletti, in his excitement, turned to the left and not to the right, and went his way over the open moor.

Further he went, and still it seemed to him that he did not approach the town; on the contrary, the country widened, here and there a short row of squalid cottages, here and there great pools of standing water, with thick clay banks, and that unceasing whirl of machinery always going on.

Castaletti grew suddenly alive to his situation. Before him the road abruptly rose up on a steep-pitched bridge, under which passed trucks from one pit to another. He went to the summit of the bridge, and looked over the country round. Far, perhaps miles away, he saw Lealstone; between it and him lay a coal-pit, where the furnaces burned brightly. Castaletti made this coalpit his first goal, from thence he thought he could go straight down to the valley. The lights gleamed brightly—perhaps it would not be so far as it looked, and at all events he would ask the pitmen at the furnaces how to arrive there. The moon now shone out with fitful brilliancy, and he could see two of them standing together. So he went on, now slipping into deep clay, now into water which wet him to the knee. He was drawing near to the pit—within a hundred paces—when he saw the two men by the furnaces looking toward him, and suddenly shouting loudly, then they began running in his direction. A cold terror came over him. What would they do? Could they be calling to him? He summoned up all his courage. Yes. They were gesticulating wildly, frantically. He imagined some terrible danger pursuing him, perceptible to them though not to himself. In his fear Castaletti began to run towards them. What could they want? What meant their cries? His hair bristled up in fright, and his lips muttered the half-forgotten paternoster of his childhood. The moon suddenly disappeared behind a cloud. He still ran—one more wild shout from the men. Ha! What was it? His foot stumbled. He was falling—down, down, with wild frantic arms vainly grasping the air, and all was over.

About a hundred feet from the pit was an old disused shaft covered by an iron grating. The men had been cleaning out some rubbish to-day, tossing it down the shaft, and the grating had not been replaced.

CHAPTER V.

It was growing darker and darker, and still Godfrey Neville and his mother paced the garden walks deep in conversation. Audine, asleep in the drawing-room, dreaming the sweet dreams of her lovely childhood, had vanished from their thoughts. The mother, pale and frightened, wept bitter tears of fear and anxiety, and never looked on Godfrey's face without a shudder. Was her great dread, the horror of her life, coming to pass? Was Godfrey's mind indeed unhinged; jangling like sweet bells out of tune?—or what did this wild story mean?

"Mother, you will think me mad," he had begun. "You will never believe the strange story I have to tell."

She looked up in his face, saw the wild far-away look of his eyes, the damp dishevelled hair, the restless working of his brows, and her heart died within her.

"Godfrey, my boy, what do you mean?"

"You know, mother, how the image of my ideal has haunted my brain; how night and day it has been with me, slowly growing under my hand from one beauty to another. She is perfect!" he cried; "she is perfection itself. All the divine attributes, each of which may be met with in a separate individuality, are combined in her—love, sweetness, angelic charity, modesty, grace, mercy, and peace have kissed each other—these words are from the Bible, are they not?—and altogether express the perfection of my White Queen."

AND THE . . . HAND WAS CLOSED.

"I know it is lovely, Godfrey, and bears a curious resemblance to Audine."

"Audine! is she like Audine?" he said, dreamily. "Oh, yes, maybe; there is a likeness between earth and heaven; you can see it in the heaven-reflected color of water. Yes, they may be like."

"You cannot compare warm life to cold stone!"

"Cold stone! She lives; she breathes!" he shuddered.

"Godfrey, what do you mean?"

He suddenly stopped her, and seized her hands; his own were burning with fever. "Why did you go away and leave me, mother? Why did you not stay, you and the child who is like my queen?"

Mrs. Neville's tears began to fall.

"It would have been better for me if you had not gone, mother! then perhaps this strange thing might not have happened."

"Tell me, Godfrey, what has happened?"

He went on:—

"It was an inspiration. Her hand was lovely. It completed my perfection—that alone remained to do, and she would have stood before me completed. Tell me, mother, do you remember her hand—were the fingers raised?"

"I do not know," she murmured, trying to choke back her tears.

"I rack my brain night and day trying to recall how those fingers were placed, and I cannot; perhaps I shall some day." he went on—"some day when I am calmer, and my head is not aching."

"Godfrey, try and be calm; tell me what makes you speak so wildly. Oh, my boy, what has happened?"

"Listen! I had been working—working night and day, and she was almost done; the cast of her little hand was beautiful, and out of the marble had grown part of it, fine-grained, and white as snow. You know Castaletti, my old friend? He has been very strange of late, fitful in his temper—sometimes bitter, almost savage; sometimes melting into maudlin tears at a single thoughtless word. He also has a work on hand—a pretty woman seated with a book on her knee; he has destroyed it by an effort to change the expression to some look of my White Queen. He has shed tears over the failure. Sometimes I feared that he drank too much, he was so capricious and so strange. At last he told me that an impulse had seized him to go to Rome; that something had occurred which made him long for wealth, crave for it passionately, and that he knew he was but wasting time here; that he must go to the city of art, and drink in beauty from the rich stores of his native land. I was grieved for my light-hearted friend of old—he who had never known a sorrow or a care. I grieved for him, for something had crossed his path, and I thought of the old story—the sylvan faun had developed into a suffering man. Was it the air of sordid, money-loving England? Poor Castaletti! Poor friend! So he was to go, and before he went he entreated that he might give a farewell supper to all his friends in my studio. I was glad, and would have done anything to please him, for I felt grieved to lose him.

THE COMING COMET!

It is Expected to Strike and Smash the Earth.

That is if its Tail Doesn't Swing It Around in Another Direction—Not Due for Some Time Yet

There is, according to the authorities a comet coming straight for the earth. It is coming at the rate of seven thousand miles an hour, and when it reaches here there will be more or less trouble, and something will have to break. The astronomers in question think the earth will get a trifle the worst of it and are accordingly feeling anxious. It is due here unless somebody turns a switch, and sidetracks it, in less than nine hundred years, so no wonder the discoverers of that comet are anxious. But more things than a comet are due to arrive here before long. With the hot weather will come sickness and death. Spring, deadly spring, will reap its fearful harvest. There will come

Malaria,
Typhoid,
Diphtheria,
Bilious Complaints,
Blood Troubles,
Blotches and Boils,
Pimples and Eruptions,
Ague and Chills, Rheumatism.

And hundreds of other complaints common to the season. There will be many a gap left at the table. Many a little coffin will be carried to its last resting place; many a home will be filled with sadness.

Take no chances. Prepare for spring. If you or your children are not strong and healthy get strong and healthy. If you are not well get well. If you are well keep well.

Scott's Sarsaparilla is what you want. It is the greatest blood purifier and spring tonic of the age. There is nothing like it on the market. Don't confound it with other weak imitations. It is easily the leading blood medicine of the day, as the splendid testimonials published elsewhere show. Try it.

Scott's Sarsaparilla is unlike most patent medicines. It does not profess to cure every disease under the sun. But it will cure all those that have the same common origin in disorders of the blood, liver, stomach and nervous centers.

More about Scott's Sarsaparilla to-morrow.

THE LEAN AND SLIPPERED.—An old gentleman who lives near Parrsboro, and who will be 94 years of age if he lives till May 20th, walked two miles to a candy pull last Tuesday night. When the dance was in progress, grandfather forgot his age and asked for the floor to be cleared. He danced the Highland fling without an error. He then waltzed with several of the prettiest girls at the party and went home with one of them at daylight in the morning.—Ex.

A Forty-Year Old Grievance Removed.

In Bath, Ont., Chase's Kidney Liver Pills are a standard remedy. Joseph Gardner, of this town, suffered for 40 years with indigestion and its ever present accompaniments—constipation and headache. K. & L. Pills are the only remedy that gave him relief. 25c. a box, of all druggists. One pill a dose.

The aluminum vessels now in use in the French army are found to wear very little.

Tore His Flesh in Agony.

"I was troubled with blind itching piles for 20 years; was unable to work and tore my flesh in agony. United States and Canadian doctors failed to relieve. Chase's Ointment was a God-send. I am a better man than in 20 years, and am able to work every day." Philip Wallace, blacksmith, Iroquois, Ont. Chase's Ointment cures piles, eczema, and irritant diseases. All druggists, 60c. per box.

Arizona was first in the market with this season's oranges, beating California by a week or so.

It is said that nine Leadville mines have recently been sold to British capitalists for $1,500,000.

NO HOME WITHOUT IT.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil should be emblazoned in letters of gold upon the altar of every household. It saves life when every other means for the cure of consumption or lung troubles fail. For many years Cod Liver Oil was held in disfavor on account of its unpleasant taste, and the inferior quality of the preparations. Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil revived its use because it is pleasant to take and gives immediate results in creating new blood, and thus giving sufferers the strength to overcome the dire enemy. It is the great life saver of the age. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. In big bottles, 50c. and $1, at all drug stores.

One hundred and sixty plows started in a row in a recent plowing match at Dartford, England.

Bad Blood Between Them.

The ever slaving farmer's wife, her delicate sister in the city, suffer more than they care to tell. The dark rings round the eyes, headaches, dizziness, palpitation or rheumatic twinges, betoken a run-down system. The blood is poor, and is a bar to enjoyment of life. Scott's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, strengthens and vitalizes the system, and speedily restores the bloom of health to the cheeks. It cures when all others fail.

CECIL RHODES AS A BOY.

A Scapegrace Up to All Manner of Pranks and in Constant Trouble.

The old nurse of Cecil Rhodes tells some interesting stories of the celebrated Englishman which go to prove the old saying that in his case the child was father of the man. He was constantly getting into trouble of all kinds. Having been scolded by his mother one morning while he was getting out of bed he jumped through a window with nothing on but his nightshirt, and ran around the grounds chased by the entire household. Finally he succeeded in climbing up a high wall, and refused to come down until his stockings had been handed up to him.

One of his weaknesses was a fondness for jam. The nurse tells how she made some on one occasion, and put the pots, as she thought, completely out of his reach. "Two of them," says the nurse, "were gone in a few minutes." Cecil admitted the theft. "It was very good," he said; "make some more," and went off whistling. His mother was lenient to him. "Let him alone," she used to say, "it is best as long as he speaks the truth."

Passing Styles in Jewelry.

Here is a drawer full of coral jewelry. I cannot sell it at any price! Here is a coral set I paid 2.200 francs for. You can have it for $10. Why? Out of fashion and no one can tell whether it will again become the mode for half a century. Here is a cat's eye—they are all a species of garnet—that cost me 800 francs. It has no price at all upon it now. A few years ago 'melee' diamonds formed its settings were the rage. What do I mean by 'melee?' They are the small brilliants, ranging from one-quarter down to the one-sixty-fourth of a carat. Here is a 'melee' brooch for which three years ago I asked $720; I can duplicate it now for $225. But three years ago 'melee' diamonds sold for $400 and $700 a carat; now they have very little value.—Philadelphia Times.

Admirers of Beatrice.

Prince Henry was not Princess Beatrice's first passion. In 1877 she was reported to have "fallen in love" with a young man who has since attained distinction as a preacher. Among the eligible men who are said to have aspired to the hand of Beatrice are Prince Oscar of Sweden, Amadeo, late King of Spain, and Louis of Battenberg, an elder brother of Prince Henry.—Toronto Globe.

Appearances May Deceive.

Should you happen to see a girl walking along the street with her face wreathed in placid smiles, don't take it for granted that she feels perfectly contented and happy. For the truth is that—

She may be having a nerve destroying argument with herself as to whether her skirt and waist meet properly in the back.

She may have a tiny hole in her shoe and be perfectly wretched over the thought of getting her silk stocking soiled.

She may be on the verge of insanity because she knows that the one pin with which she fastened her skirt is going to give way.

She may be conscious of a big chunk of soot that has found lodgment on the end of her nose.

She may remember that there is but one hairpin in her hair, and that it would be just her luck if it were all to tumble down.

She may hear a little snap and may know that her garter has broken. That, however, is simply too horrible for words.—New York Advertiser.

British India.

Great Britain has been stretching her wings over India. In 1842 she laid claim to 626,000 squares miles of that country. She made additions to this every year except 1843, 1845 and 1852, down to 1856, when her possessions aggregated 856,000 square miles. Advances were made in 1866, 1882 and 1886, and now the area of India under British rule is 927,887 square miles. British India is larger than all that part of the United States lying east of the Mississippi river and its population five times as great as the present population of this whole country. Great Britain may not be able to acquire much more of India. Indeed there is likely to be difficulty in retaining what she has with native dissatisfaction and the watchfulness of her aggravating enemy on the north, who in the last 40 years has moved his boundaries over many degrees of latitude.—Texas Siftings.

Window Screens.

A transparency at a kitchen window attracted my notice the other day by its novelty. "I made it," said the owner, "because I could not get a transparency at the village store. I wanted one of those screens, you know, that permit you to see out, but do not let outsiders see in. I took an old frame for a wire screen, painted it to match the outside painting of the house and then tacked it to a piece of organdie, fitting it perfectly and stretching it very tight. From thin chintz I cut flowers and sprays, and arranging the design in my mind proceeded to paste them on. After all were on I laid a piece of pasteboard behind and put on heavy weights until they were dry. I then gave the whole a coat of white varnish."

The Swiss Government made a profit of about $1,000,000 last year on the monopoly in spirits.

A NEW CLUB.

Name Suggested for a New Social Organization in London.

LONDON (Special) April 27—It has been facetiously suggested that a new social club in progress of organization in this city should be entitled "The Dodd's Kidney Pill Club" as the present members are all enthusiastic advocates of that remedy and in common with many other citizens declare that in all cases of kidney trouble no other agent has been found so completely effective. Most Londoners have at their fingers ends the particulars of the many marvellous cures through the use of this specific. In every drugstore in the city the medicine is kept in large quantities and warmly recommended.

N.B. TRADE MARK THE VARNISHED BOARD ON WHICH THE GOODS ARE WRAPPED.

Priestley's

"Are they not exquisite in their soft richness?" is the constant remark of ladies touching Priestley's famous black dress goods. And that is the truth, but it is not the whole description, for they have a character for refinement, for wearing and draping quality, which no other dress goods can lay claim to. The Priestley's appear to have gathered up all their excellences, and concentrated them in "Eudora," the latest black dress fabric they have given to the world. In every respect equal to the famous Henriettas, it surpasses them in extra width, and weight, and in dust-repelling quality. It is wrapped on "The Varnished Board" and Priestley's name is stamped on every five yards. 30
