Call For United Europe Sounded By De Gaulle

PARIS (AP) — President de Gaulle made a plea for a united Europe at a state dinner at the Elysee Palace in the question of whether there would now be a war in Viet Nam if Europe had been united.

N. Kosygin, who arrived Thursday for a nine-day state visit. The French president said in his toast at the dinner that "the Soviet Union and the French Republic are resolved to realize and to organize, in all fields, the co-operation of the two countries."

Kosygin said French-Soviet relations are much closer than two years ago. He said he agreed with much of what de Gaulle said but made no reference to closer Soviet ties with Western Europe.

De Gaulle renewed his call for a grand design for a united Europe that would extend "from the Atlantic to the Urals." De Gaulle said that on a practical scale, this could be accomplished first by widened exchanges of trade, scientific and technical information, literary and artistic output, students and tourists.

De Gaulle added that with European togetherness there would come "the possibility to consider objectively... all the subjects of common interest, especially that of the fate of Germany" and of security, which are obviously linked and without settlement of which Europe can never find either harmony or stability.

"And now much could be said of what our continent, cured of the passion to conquer, could do in favor of peace everywhere it is troubled, if it wanted with solidarity to assure each people of the earth the right and the guarantee to decide itself its own destiny."

"Would there have been a war in Viet Nam if Europe was united?"

Kosygin said his government's policy was one of opposing "the forces of aggression, of opposition to the aggravation of the international situation, that of fighting against the threat of a new world war. All this offers a good base for the development of our relations with France."

101-GUN SALUTE FIRED

De Gaulle himself drove to the airport to welcome Kosygin. As they left the airport, guns fired a 101-gun salute, such as accorded heads of state.

The two leaders were cloistered with a pair of interpreters in de Gaulle's Elysee Palace for nearly two hours. Informed sources said they had a frank exchange of views on Germany, Viet Nam, European security and disarmament.

Prior to the conference, Kosygin spent most of the day on ceremonial rituals, including a reception at which he was introduced to the diplomatic corps.
