Show Here Set By Hank Snow

Hank Snow, known as the "Singing Ranger" and as a Mar-timer who has advanced to top rank in the field of country and western music, is bringing his show to Charlottetown for a one-night appearance next Thursday at The Sports Arena.

Recently added to the "Country Music Hall of Fame" by Billboard magazine, a leading U.S. entertainment publication, Snow has had his name inscribed beside that of the famous Jimmie Rogers.

That recognition reflects the steady advance toward the top in his field made by Snow, who started on his career from Blue Rocks, Lunenburg County, N.S., and who worked on a coastal freighter, a lumberjack, stevedore and cowboy before the break came which put him on radio.

His start up the country music ladder came when radio station CHNS, Halifax, signed him to a contract. As his fame grew there, RCA Victor signed him for his Canadian label records. Since then his popularity has spread across Canada, to Australia and latterly to the U.S.

With his signing as guest star on WSM's "Grand Old Opry" program, he is ranked now as a star of radio, television and records.

Monday Recalls Fateful Battle Of Vimy Ridge

Monday, June 2nd, the anniversary of a date which will live in the memory of many First War Canadian veterans for ever. It was on that date in 1916, that the German Army selected a narrow section of front on which to concentrate one of the most savage and protracted bombardments, of the entire war. Their massed guns raged the Ypres salient with a deluge of shells which never ceased for 5 long hours.

Even in "quiet" days the long salient (often called the bloody angle) projecting into the German lines, daily produced its quota of dead and wounded. Several miles long, it was surrounded on three sides by the Germans, then at the height of their First War fighting strength. Many military experts held that it was indefensible but it protected the last high ground which led to the Channel ports, and was being held by the British Army at all costs. The German objective was not only to smash in the head of the salient but to cripple the Third Canadian Division which was defending it. They knew that the British Army was about to open its first great offensive of the war and they wished to create a major diversion and to disrupt the plans for the coming attack.

It was the fate of the Eighth Canadian Infantry Brigade of the Third Division to bear the brunt of this onslaught.

TUNNELLED UNDER TRENCHES

It was not only artillery fire which decimated the battalions. The German had tunneled under the Canadian trenches probably for several months, and these trenches were packed with high explosives and blown up at a critical moment of the attack. Many men were buried and never heard of again.

Then the barrage lifted and the German advanced in full marching order, expecting little or no resistance. But there was resistance from scattered remnants of the survivors and the Fifth C.M.R. with its detachment from the Island Light Horse, were among those who made a spirited counter attack described vividly in the London papers at that time. Despite their great efforts the Germans were able to advance only about 600 or 700 yards, and even this meagre gain was wiped out when the First Canadian Division counter attacked two weeks later, and restored the front almost to its former position.

In Charlottetown Col. Fred Andrews and Major Norman Lowther, who on that day lost his leg, are among some of the better known survivors of what was known to the veterans in those far-off days simply as the "June Scrap". There are others scattered here and there throughout the Island, and it can be assumed that none of them has ever forgotten the trial by battle that they endured that day.

EDUCATION
Education is essential and all standards of training and teaching throughout the world of mankind should be brought into conformity and agreement; a universal language will be adopted and be taught by all the schools and institutions of the world, this is one of the great factors in the unification of man.

Education must be considered as most important; for as diseases in the world of bodies are extremely contagious, so, in the same way, qualities of spirit and heart are extremely contagious.

It is incumbent upon thee to nurture the children from the love of God and to urge them towards spiritual matters, to turn to God and to acquire good manners, best characteristics and praiseworthy virtues and qualities in the world of humanity, and to study science with the utmost diligence; so that they may become spiritual, heavenly and attracted to the fragrances of sanctity from their childhood, I beg to confirm them therein.
