

1,000 Homeless As Floods Hit English Resort

WYEMOUTH, Eng. (Reuters)—Floods pumped water into the sea Tuesday after 24 hours of rain spilled more than 100,000 tons of water on this coastal resort and the surrounding area. More than 1,000 persons were made homeless in the town whose normal population is 33,000. Swelled by thousands of summer vacationists.

Furniture floated from store windows and yachts tore loose from anchors in the bay and drifted into the shopping area. Three trailers floated 200 yards downstream on a nearby river.

There were no casualties, but throughout the night fleets of rowboats toured the town, rescuing householders from upstairs windows.

On Tuesday the sun shone brightly after the storm—which broke Britain's heat-wave—as firemen, soldiers, and volunteers cleared the mud-littered streets.

FROST IN NORWAY

Scandinavia: Frost in southern Norway damaged young potato plants. On one of the Swedish islands, tankers Tuesday were selling water to farmers whose wells had dried up during a drought.

France: Winds of 100 miles an hour ripped through the central part of the country uprooting trees, telegraph poles and causing widespread damage to property and crops around Auvergne. Monday, 22 persons died of drowning; several fishermen who fell into the water after suffering sunstroke.

Germany: West Germans continued to swelter in humid heat despite a series of violent electrical storms and heavy rains. Incomplete reports put the death toll during the week-long heat-wave at 170, mainly from drownings.

Souris Snackbar Is Remodelled

Moving ahead with the progressively expanding town of Souris is the Souris Snackbar which has been completely remodelled in recent months.

The Souris Snackbar, which is owned by Mr. Sterling Gillespie, celebrated its sixth birthday this year with a renovation of the interior and exterior.

The inside of this modern snackbar is completely finished in birch plywood. A new soda fountain, as well as a new propane gas range, grill, French fryer, dish washer and sterilizer have been installed.

Every measure has been taken to ensure customers of the utmost service and comfort. Thirteen persons may be accommodated at the counter at any one time and each of the three booths will service four people.

The exterior of the restaurant has been attractively decorated with the front being painted grey and trimmed in white.

HOME OF THE STAMPEDE

How many of the thousands entering Victoria Park during Stampede Week realized what they were getting into? Most were simply absorbed by the mass of humanity and gained no conception of what the place really looks like. This aerial photo graphically shows the panorama in the centre is the track, and the tiny plume

buildings. The grandstand is to the left or the track, which surrounds the infield and stock pens. Along the bottom is the Royal American Shows midway.

Translation Limits Big Four Speechmaking Time

GENEVA, Switzerland (Reuters)—The system of translation adopted for the Big Four conference means that each head of government is limited to about two hours of formal speech in the whole week in the council chamber.

The languages of the conference are English, Russian, and French. As each head of government speaks, his remarks are simultaneously translated through headphones into the two other languages. Other delegates can choose which they listen to by means of a switch.

But at Russian insistence, the two translations are again given separately after the speaker has finished.

The result is that only a third of each session is devoted to business.

believe the Russians like it that way because the translations give them time to think over what the Western statesmen are saying and to work out replies.

Before it was agreed that the statements of the Big Four should be published, it had been decided not to use the translation equipment at all for fear that the leaders' remarks might be picked up on short wave radio.

THE LONELY RIVER

Lonely river flowing to the sea, calling, calling, come back to me. Oh, lovely creek where have you gone? I now alone must carry on.

God placed us here so long ago—amid forest hills high and low. Together we watched small children play on wild flower paths in bright array.

Time went by and fled so fast—they thought their youth would never last. Alas, time waits not—it must go on—

For you 'twas short and hushed your song.

Miss you more as time goes by—And from my waves oft comes a sigh.

Enchanted creek, I'll wait for you—The same old course we will pursue.

Your lonely hills look to the sky—To find the star of hope they try. Time may change the will of men—And bring my creek to life again.

Once more you'll be a part of me—We'll flow as one into the sea—All the hills will smile on you—Bringing joyful tidings to Montague.

—Lena Vessey, formerly of Montague.

President Pledges

against Bulganin's opening position Monday that other countries—meaning Germany's link with NATO—had to change first.

Faure, as chairman of Tuesday's session, spoke first, then Eden. Eisenhower, speaking third, said he wanted to talk about uniting Germany from the point of view of the concept and purposes of NATO. He recalled that European nations had twice suffered German invasion in this century; it had cost the European nations dearly and even though Britain and the United States had not been invaded they had been hurt.

It was at this point Eisenhower asked Zhukov to listen carefully.

HAD ENOUGH WAR

The president went on: "When he first assumed command of SHAPE—the NATO military headquarters for Europe—he accepted the assignment in the belief that NATO was truly an organization for peace and not for war. He had had enough of war.

At that time—1951—it would have been the worst possible thing to have a military vacuum in Germany, Germany in that condition would have been a fertile field for Hitlerism. For that purpose NATO was established as an organization for defence and not for attack.

Furthermore, the president said, all the world's eyes were on the military forces of the free world. The facts about these are reported constantly in news media, and in the United States, he continued, Congress receives information on the size and scale of American forces which becomes public.

ing whether it would not be possible to try to agree on the question of armed forces for Germany and adjoining countries—a proposal he advanced when the talks began.

The prime minister said Britain regards the problem of German unity as "vital and most urgent."

But Bulganin refused to budge from his attitude, which he said reflected the Soviet government's well-considered opinion.

He said in his main statement he realized that it would be "unrealistic" to demand abrogation of the Paris agreements (for rearming West Germany as a member of NATO) signed last October. But Russia could not accept the Eden proposals for a new anti-aggression pact of the Big Four and a united Germany.

He said the "real purpose" of NATO was revealed by the fact that Russia had not been asked to join. The anti-aggression pact plan was a "wounding suggestion" to make to a powerful nation such as Russia.

CONDITIONS NOT RIPE

In his view, conditions were not yet ripe for East and West Germany to be reunited because of Western German membership in the Western alliance.

The German problem would have to be settled differently and this would take a long time. Meanwhile, the "two Germanies" should draw closer together, a process which was in fact already taking place.

At the end of the session, Russia proposed the German question be passed over in favor of discussion on other points in the agenda, including European security, disarmament and development of contacts between East and West.

The Western leaders indicated they didn't want to let the German problem drop at this time, however. The four foreign ministers were directed to continue discussion of the question, particularly on ways of dealing with it, and report back to their chiefs today.

Sees China As Vast Market For British Steel

LONDON, (Reuters)—An industrial executive Tuesday pictured Communist China as a vast potential buyer of Britain's steel products, which are being forced out of European markets by German competition.

Miles Beever, head of the Brush group, makers of industrial engines and electrical equipment, told a press conference that German steel products were priced at 30 per cent below similar British goods in Europe. He also noted that industrialization of India was eliminating a valuable British export outlet.

But he characterized China as an "immense" potential market, and declared that its reopening to British interests would be of major benefit to this country's exporters.

Lambspringer complacency of British exporters, he declared that last week's sharp increase in coal prices would produce a further "substantial increase" in the price of steel.

delay in uniting Germany and in providing safeguards for those countries who might legitimately feel threatened by the power of the once-aggressive Germans.

The British leader commented that the differences between East and West in timing their programs to unite Germany might run into years.

Britain, herself a major power, had no objection to any genuine guarantees underpinning the security of her people. In fact, Eden added, she found them "comforting."

Bulganin's dismissal of Eden's proposals left British delegates surprised and puzzled. One British informant wondered whether Russia is deliberately trying to create the impression she is so strong that she is disinterested in safeguards unless they are part of a global, not regional, system.

The British and Soviet prime ministers had the chance to pursue their conference-room exchange privately Tuesday night.
