MARY HAWTHORN Popular Indian Girl Longs For More Social Freedom

Dear Mary Hawthorn: I am a girl from India. My father is a member of the Indian Embassy in Ottawa. I will be 17 pretty soon and a senior in high school next September. I go around with the most popular boys and girls at school. But each time someone invites me to a party I have to have a good excuse ready, as my father has never allowed me to go to even one party since we arrived in the states, two years ago.

I've talked with him in many times and tried to reason things out but it hasn't changed him a bit. Now he says I must not go to accept me, when I never can join in socializing? I am missing out on the best days of my life. I can understand that it is not our Indian custom to date, etc. but there are other Indian girls whose parents allow them to go out occasionally, while I am sitting home in my room all day, doing nothing. The only time I ever get to see or talk in my friends is at school, and even there it is very few.

Dear N. A.: As a matter of fact, you aren't missing the best days of your life in being denied permission to become a teenage party-goer in the American scene.

The best days of your life will come later, between your 30th and 60th birthdays, if all goes well and you are not a success in those great decades of life will depend, in large measure, upon the way in which your student years are spent.

Until now, at any rate, your parents are doing a good job in guiding and supervising your social development. It seems if I may judge by the cordial letters you enjoy with your old school group of boys and girls in your local high school.
