SPAVIN.—Bone spavin is a blemish which occurs on the inside or hinder pastera of the hock joint, and is an ossified or bony tumor. It occurs at all periods in the life of a horse, and is usually induced by a strain of the ligaments, followed by inflammation. The hock joint is made up of several bones, but two of which are usually affected; they are called the scaphoid and uniform mognum. These bones rest upon each other, superimposed upon the metatarsal or long bones, and turning but very slightly on each other, being fastened almost to immobility by ligaments, which become inflamed in consequence of strains, and ossification ensues. Attached to the extremities of the tendons terminating in the hock are small sacks of mucous secretion, designed to lubricate the parts and permit the necessary motion without being attended with friction. Overstrain produces enlargement of these sacks, and is the immediate cause of thorough pins and wind galls. Upon the inside, and exactly on the curve of the joint, one of these bags is located, and its distension causes bog-spavin; between the enlargement of the joint and the skin a vein is pressed upon this sack, and when inflammation ensues the circulation is retarded, the vein becomes distended from the bag to the adjacent valve below, and blood spavin is the result. In a large majority of cases where blood spavin is believed to be present, there exists only bog-spavin; the two are so readily confounded that oftentimes only a practised veterinarian is capable of determining. In some instances where lameness has been caused by bog-spavin, blood spavin has followed, and the horse has recovered from his lameness, as the one sometimes counteracts the effects of the other. In other cases, where the lameness occasionally returns, the bog and not the blood spavin, produces the defect of carriage. As these defects all arise from like causes, similar treatment is required. Whenever inflammation is present, cooling purgatives and alteratives should be given in connection with softening and cooling outward applications. It has been said that frequent bathing with sour buttermilk will soften bone spavin and cause it to be absorbed. This should be the design in all remedies used in preference to the old system of cutting, burning and blistering. In cases of bog and blood spavin, compressing, with cooling diet and medicine, will usually effect a cure in connection with rest and abstinence from all exciting cause; and, in order to have the cure permanent, the horse must for a long time be used with great caution, avoiding violent exercise, high speed, heavy draft, hard pavements, plank roads, and long standing on hard floors.

WATER GAS.—"Well that is a discovery!" exclaimed Mrs. Partington, smilingly; as she stood with the pitcher in her right hand, her left resting upon the table, and her eyes fixed upon the flame of a glass lamp, that sputtered a moment and then shot out a light that irradiated every part of the little kitchen and revealed the portrait of Paul upon the wall, and Ike asleep by the fire. She spoke to herself; it was a way she had; she met with no contradiction from that quarter. "This is a discovery! Where is Tom Paine and his gas now, I should like to know? Here I've been and filled this lamp up with water, and it burns just as well as the real gas." The experiment was perfectly triumphant; the problem of light from water was demonstrated; and yet, with this vast fact revealed to her, Mrs. Partington, with a modesty equal to that of the great philosopher who picked up a pocketful of rocks on the shore of the great ocean of truth, smiled with delight at her discovery, nor once thought of getting out a patent or selling rights. "Good morning, Uncle Jim." "Good morning." "Well, you got your daughter married off, have you?" "Yes." "Really Providence smiles upon you." "Smiles; no blessing you she snickered right out!" A man who has tried it says that all the short cuts to wealth are overcrowded. A lady visiting New York city found a ragged, cold, and hungry child gazing wistfully at some cakes in a shop window. She took the little forlorn one by the hand, led her into the shop, bought her some cake, and then took her elsewhere supplying more needed wants. The grateful little creature looked the benevolent woman full in the face, and with artless simplicity enquired, "Are you God's wife?" "Do you believe in ghosts, Mrs. Partington?" it was asked of the old lady, somewhat timidly. "To be sure I do," replied she, "as much as I believe that bright fulminary there will rise in the yeast-to-morrow morning, if we lives and nothing happens. Two apprehensions have sartily appeared in our own family. Why, I saw my dear Paul, a fortnight before he died, with my own eyes, just as plain as I see you now; and though it turned out afterwards to be a rosebush with a night-cap on it, I still always think, to the day of my desolation, that it was a forerunner sent to me. "T other one came in the night, when we were asleep, and carried away three candles and a pint of spirits that we kept in the house for an embarkation. Believe in ghosts, indeed! I guess I do, and he must be a dreadful stytic as does n't!" and she piously turned to the part of the Book relating to the witch of Endor. "Can you do all sorts of casting here?" inquired a solemn looking chap at the iron-works the other day. "Yes, sir," said Frank preparing to take an order, "all sorts." "Well then," returned the solemn enquirer, "I would have you cast a shadow." He was immediately cast out.

Every trade requires brains, and none more so than that of cutting and making up a garment in fit variety of the human form; but some people seem to imagine that it requires no more judgment to cut a coat than to sew a leg,—an erroneous idea, the effects of which are seen in the shabby and ill-fitting garments we every day behold in the streets. There is no earthly reason to prevent us Provincialists from being as elegantly and fashionably dressed as the Americans, and the subscriber will use his best endeavors to reach a "consummation so devoutly to be wished."
