

MR. AND MRS. JOSEPH MacINNIS AND ATTENDANTS

Pretty Autumn Wedding At St. Mary's Church

A double ring ceremony took place in St. Mary's Church, Souris, P.E.I., when Rev. Edwin Steele united in the holy bonds of matrimony, Rose Anne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Macdonald, Souris, with Joseph Ian, son of Mrs. MacInnis and the late John F. MacInnis, Morell.

Given in marriage by her father the bride looked lovely in a floor length gown of nylon net over satin with hooped skirt. Her lace bodice was trimmed with sequins, and fashioned with a high neckline in front coming to a V in the back with scalloped edging and tiny covered buttons extending to the torso. Her long sleeves tapered gracefully to points over the hands; Her finger tip veil of nylon tulle was held in place with tiara of rhinestones and sequins. She carried a cascade bouquet of red roses.

centered with a three tier wedding cake, topped with miniature bride and groom. Mr. Frank Macdonald was master of ceremonies. The toast to the bride was proposed by the Rev. Edwin Steele and was fittingly responded to by the groom.

Following the reception the happy couple left on a honeymoon trip to parts of interest in the Maritime. For travelling the bride wore an autumn suit of dusk rose with black accessories.

Previous to her marriage the bride was tendered two miscellaneous showers, one at the home of Mrs. Richard Power, Souris, the other at the home of Mrs. Joseph Whalen, Bear River. The bride was recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts.

Miss Mary MacInnis, sister of the groom, as maid of honor, was attired in a ballerina length gown of sky blue nylon crystalite, with matching headress, mitts and shoes. She carried a white lace parasol filled with pink and white roses.

The bridesmaids Miss Helen Macdonald and Mrs. Alex Macdonald, sisters of the bride, were attired in similar gowns of yellow embossed faille, with white hats, mitts and shoes. They carried yellow lace baskets filled with mixed flowers.

Mr. Danny MacInnis, brother of the groom, as best man. The ushers were Mr. Alex Macdonald, brother-in-law of the bride, and Mr. Gerard MacInnis, brother of the groom.

The bride's mother chose for her daughter's wedding, a dress of navy crepe with pink and navy accessories. She wore a corsage of pink roses.

ELLEN'S DIARY

A Merry Laugh Is Pretty

Crisp stars last night—and to-morrow a shadow of Winter at the moment in a coverlet of white on the ears.

"Snow—real snow!" Mack welcomed its arrival. Then added, "But not yet, we don't want it before we get our mangels in and the potatoes and turnips. Pretty dry feeding for the cattle through the winter without some roots in the barn."

Today, sharp with an edged Autumn-wind and laced with first touches of snow took our farmers to pieces of fencing, setting, or removing boundaries so that the cattle might come to the clovered aftermath about.

We went with James, the children and their father to herd these. Just before dusk to the stable. "Make haste, Ellen," James said coming in with the request. "Here! Let me help you into this coat. It's chilly outdoors." His hand happened to fall on one long and black, rather quaint now but quite modish in its day. We tucked up the trusty broom and thus equipped and arrayed followed him, with the children attending us, down the driveway in the direction of a hay-field that was.

The new moon, a winsome thing at that time was swinging low in a patch of clear blue above the mill in the depth of our valley. To the left of it, the evening star sparkled. A black cat bounded playfully ahead of us around the curve of lane. Granddaughter laughed merrily, the sound pretty on the still evening air.

"You're quite witch-like," she offered. "You have the black cloak and cat and the broom. Why don't you mount it and see if you can fly across the face of the moon?"

"She couldn't," Mack smiled broadly, "not tonight. If this were Hallow 'e'en she just might take off."

"It's no good straggling along after those cattle, Ellen," James ahead called back. "It will need all us working together to get them away from that clover."

It was such an evening as artists might try to capture serene as the face of a woman who has seen and known all the vicissitudes of earth and has recognized beauty in unsuspected places. Calm . . . so calm we noticed in passing the rustle of a birch leaf when it dropped to settle with its fellow in the rest. And beautiful—the pond full of the silvery light and shadow of the afterlight, which let us catch still something of the loveliness of the dimming, thinning colors of the near trees about.

It was pleasant to be abroad and nice too when the successful excursion was ended to come in and light and the supper as spread on the table. Only a token fall of it to be sure, a light and melting sprinkle nevertheless a reminder that farm-harvestings should be hurried to their completion.

And on into the October month we go, scuffling through the crisp ling leaves, hand in hand with the Autumn.

Until tomorrow ——— Diary — Good-night.

MARY HAWORTH

Fiance May Come Back

Dear Mary Haworth: I am 19 and Jim is 20. We have been engaged for a year, and during that year I thought I knew and understood him completely. We used to have a lot of fun, see each other twice a week and on weekends; and he'd phone me every night. He was considerate, showed affection and tried to please me.

Lately he is a changed person. For the past month I've seen him only on Saturday nights, and on these occasions we usually stay at home. Otherwise he may telephone occasionally, but always to say that he is going out with "the guys." I didn't mind that, as I too like a night to myself; but I've learned that wherever he goes, the others are paired off—either engaged or going steady. He goes alone.

Right now it seems he is trying to prove he can date and do as he pleases, which of course is right—but why the sudden change I know it is nothing I've done, because he has told me so. He has different, but I know it is. He doesn't act as if he even knows me when we're out together. Is he ashamed of me, or what?

PUZZLE FRIENDS

At first I thought the guys might be ribbing him for paying too much attention to me; but that can't be so, because when I run into them they ask why I don't come with Jim as before, how-get-together, etc.

I love Jim very much and I am convinced he loves me too. He won't even think or talk of breaking off, because I mean too much to him, he says. Maybe I am spoiled from the affection I used to get; but still I feel he could act as if I mean something to him. Please help me; I will be very grateful for your comments—even if you have to scold me. R.S. ANOTHER GIRL?

Dear R.S.: As I get the picture, it seems fairly obvious that Jim is enamored of some other girl's girl for the time being. That's why he goes along (leaving you home) where the others go in boy-girl pairs; and why he treats you almost as a stranger when you are together—as if embarrassed by your allegiance; as if signifying (for the other girl's benefit) that he isn't very committed to you.

Evidently he hardly knows what to do about his feelings. He hasn't dared to try forthrightly to understand the other guy, I take it; for if he had, the crowd would know what's up, and why he neglects you nowadays. They wouldn't be asking you questions. Also I gather it's true that you do still mean a great deal to him—but you just aren't the one-and-only in his day dreams recently.

The British philosopher Frank J. Sheed, writing of man-woman relationships in his spiritually luminous book "Society and Sanity" (Sheed and Ward), has a viewpoint that may steady you through this crisis. He remarks (page 161) "Desire for one woman may momentarily eclipse love for another and the eclipsed love can outlast the desire, so that a moment comes when the love is in full possession again, and the dead desire seems mere emptiness and degradation."

DANGER ARISES

He continues: "Everyone knows this, and knowing it does not cure it. But a serious effort to realize it is not waste, for all that. For, in the first place, it is a reminder that all carry their treasure in earthen vessels, even young lovers . . . who feel exultantly that they and their love are beyond the reach of mortal accident . . . And, in the second place, it shows where the precautions must be taken and what counter-action is profitable . . ."

The saving precaution is never to take love for granted, and to beware letting companionship slip into a routine—even a pleasurable routine. "Then is the danger moment," says Sheed, "although the danger is less for the one who knows it can happen to him. Sound counter-action begins when one is aware of the nature of the problem. Such awareness will enable you to discern the identity of his new interest—after which you can work out a day-to-day campaign, of stabilizing mutual interest in the teeth of storm winds. M.H.
