Famous Doctor Probes Lungs, Master of Art

PHILADELPHIA, July 28 (AP)—When three-year-old Kelvin Arthur Rogers travelled 9,000 miles from Australia to Philadelphia to have Dr. Chevalier Jackson remove a nail from his lung with aid of a bronchoscope, two readers wrote a Philadelphia paper: 'Why isn't there more than one bronchoscope in the world to take pins out of children?'

The answer: There are thousands of bronchoscopes, straight, hollow metal tubes with a light at the tip for looking down gullets, wind-pipes and lungs. There are nearly 2,000 physicians trained personally by Dr. Jackson in use of the bronchoscope. And in these Chevalier Jackson.

Chevalier Jackson, M. D., age 71, who goes to bed at nine, rises at 4.30 a. m.; who never drinks or smokes who paints pictures and works with both hands; the Old Master who developed the bronchoscope technique 31 years ago who said he spent 22 years learning how to remove an open safety pin from child throats, is still unbeatable. That is why, with thousands of bronchoscopes—Siam and India have them along with the rest of the world—physicians keep sending swallows of unusual objects to Chevalier Jackson's clinic at the Temple University hospital here.

Jackson wouldn't say he is the best—even though Temple University hospital has built him a special clinic and the hospital records last year showed he was visited by 5,273 patients who usually stayed more than a day, plus 1,718 patients who stayed longer. He even writes the newspapers protests against mention of his cases. One of America's most famous and wealthiest men didn't get to Dr. Jackson's clinic because he asked a newspaperman to get him some information on it. The writer could not reveal his purpose. Dr. Jackson thought it must be publicity. He refused to see the newspaperman. Dr. Jackson's work has the spectacular quality of near perfection in technique. A patient crossed the continent with an open safety pin in his throat. Two minutes after this patient went on the table the pin was closed and removed. What the assembled medical men did not see was Chevalier Jackson spending much of his time the previous two days planning this operation. Long, slim forceps thrust down the hollow bronchoscope closed the pin. In 1927 newspaper reporters had "saved 1,800 persons" in 22 years. He did not originate the

Grand Old Woman Bears Heat Wave

OAKVILLE, Ont., July 28 (CP)—When most cases of advanced life died right and left in the prolonged heat spell Mrs. Marinda Hillyard, who lives in a century-old cottage in this shady town, managed to survive even if she is 105 years old. She celebrates her 106th birthday Nov. 28.

Probably because of her serenity and quiet acceptance of life as it came, her devoted daughter thinks Mrs. Hillyard, whose life has been studied by United States research workers, lay quietly in bed and took everything as it came like the good old stoic she is. It is of people like her that the Boston Transcript writes: 'Mrs. Kate Huyler of Bergenfield, N. S., is distinguished among centenarians. When she observed the 100th anniversary of her birth July 5, she was asked the usual question: To what did she attribute her length of years? Instead of a disquisition on the causes of longevity she said that she had always lived 'normally' and let it go at that. 'The majesty of centenarians are likely to become garrulous when asked the same question. Perhaps somebody will yet compile their answers. The result would doubtless be that what was one man's meat would appear as another man's poison. 'The grand old lady of Bergenfield evidently does not spend time in wondering how it came to pass that she has lived so long. She prefers to read the newspapers and maintain her interest in the affairs of the day. Perhaps that mental attitude has more to do with her longevity than the fact she admits eating plenty of sleep, which is as near as she can be induced to approach the customary outgivings of the centenarians.'

Busy Days As Close Nears Candidates Active With Days Left To Accomplish Most. Week's Results Count All Seek To Score Heavily Before Third Period Ends Saturday.

Spurred on by the knowledge that the third period in the Guardian "Weekly Payroll" Subscription Campaign and $25.00 Special Cash Prizes offered for the best cash reports end Saturday night and that their most effective work can and must be done before 11 p.m. Saturday, leading candidates for major prizes and extra Cash Prizes put in a busy day today and will be still busier tomorrow, Friday and Saturday.

Every worker realizes the advantage of turning in subscriptions before Saturday night ends the third period and not one of them is passing up an opportunity to score when votes are higher. Those who know where they can get new subscriptions, extensions or renewals are trying to call on every prospect yet this week.

With the principal contenders closely bunched, the leading candidates realize that prizes worth thousands of dollars in motor cars and cash are at stake. They know that nobody has a great advantage, that the matter is entirely in the hands of each individual. 'From now on' means mostly today, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. There will, of course, be an opportunity all of next week and candidates will make the most of it, but the big opportunity is provided in the time between now and 11 p.m. Saturday.

Chance For All

The leaders are so closely bunched that any one of them may be distanced in a day or two before 11 p.m. Saturday. No matter how well a candidate stands today, if he rests on his laurels and takes the desperate chance of losing, for others, equally as desirous of winning and as aggressive, are campaigning this week as never before. Every one of those not high up on the list has a chance to come from behind and win out.

There was a large attendance at Malpeque United Church on Sunday evening, 26th, when Reverend George Murray delivered his farewell sermon. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Murray are sailing in August for Trinidad and their departure is deeply regretted and will be felt by the community as they have been zealous and untiring workers during their stay at Malpeque.

Feeding The Limit

Forcing cows to produce their maximum is not likely to bring to the farmer or the dairy man the greatest profits. A wider margin is most likely to result from serving a sufficient ration of well-balanced feeds. Of course, where one is making tests to see what his cows can do getting records to be used in the advertising of his herd, then he must not take into consideration the cost of feeds and profits. This work is commendable, but it does not always prove profitable, even to many owners of pure-bred herds. To average farmers and breeders, the maximum of profit and not the maximum of production should be the goal. To increase production beyond a certain point costs more than it brings. While not met with so frequently, it is similar in one respect, to under-feeding; both how waste. From a profit, the dairy man, as well as every other feeder will find his safest and most remunerative course in supplying the optimum requirements of his animals.
