WHALES IN S'SIDE Harbour Recalled

By J.F.L. Reading an article in local papers of the crowds rushing to Dunbar, Scotland, to see the some 80 whales which became stranded on the shores at that place brings to mind an afternoon on a warm August day some 40 years or more ago when a school of these fish came into Summerside harbour.

They were first noticed shortly before noon and by mid-afternoon the outer harbour from Railway Wharf was literally full of them. They were what are called the black whale running in size from 1200 to 2000 lbs each and it was estimated that there was well over one hundred of them.

When it became known of their arrival, (the writer was one of the lucky ones to own an army rifle and to secure a spot in one of the boats), every available craft from a canoe to the racing yachts and motor boats was in the kill and every available firearm from the humble air rifle to shotguns and army rifles were to be seen firing from all angles at the fish. The wonder of it was that although firing was indiscriminate, not one casualty - other than to the fish - was reported.

The following morning the shores along the Bedouque and Wilmot sides of the harbor were to be found dead or badly wounded whales. It was estimated that fifty or more were killed or wounded. As the time of this exciting incident was in the days of the fox boom, it was not long before all the dead fish were hauled away and used for fox feed.

This to the writer's mind was one of the most exciting days around Summerside harbour in the last 50 years.
