Says Ruins Of Ancient City Of Jericho Found

NEW YORK, Sept. 19—(AP)—An archaeologist said today that ruins found in Palestine have been identified as those of the ancient city of Jericho.

Dr. James Kelso, professor of Biblical archaeology of the Pittsburgh-Kenia Theological Seminary, said as he returned aboard the liner Saturnia that "nothing like it has ever been found in Palestine."

This is what he told about the ancient city which served as the winter capital of Herod the Great in Palestine:

"The city is 'a piece of Rome bodily lifted up from the banks of the Tiber and set down in Palestine.' The buildings are of concrete, faced with diamond-shaped stones, and covered with painted plaster.

Though there was some excavation in the area in the mid-19th century and before the First World War, the ruins never were actually identified.

The type of architecture in favor in Rome about 80 B. C. provided positive identification of Jericho. It is near the present city of that name.
