The Sultan of Zanzibar has issued a decree abolishing slavery. It provides that existing rights over concubines shall remain as before, unless her freedom is claimed by a concubine on account of cruelty. But in general terms the concubines will be regarded as wives. The government will pay compensation for all slaves legally held. If Zanzibar is unable to meet the full expense it is believed that the imperial government will assist.

FARMING NO. 14.

Feeding the Root Crop.

ROOTS FOR SWINE.—For swine the roots must be boiled, but they are preferable steamed. By roots I mean turnips, rutabagas (Swedes), mangels and sugar beets. Prof. Stewart says steaming is by far the better way. There are many kinds of steamers now on the market turning wood. A steamer capable of steaming three barrels is small enough. The roots are steamed whole. To three barrels of roots add 90 pounds of ground barley, or 50 pounds of ground barley and 40 pounds of middlings, ground wheat screenings or fine wheat bran. The meal and roots should be steamed together and cooked thoroughly. The mixture of roots and meal is always fed warm. Twice a day will be given enough to feed this mixture to a swine. If the barley is grown on the farm, likewise the roots, presupposing good crops of both roots and barley, pork fed on the mixture can be made for two cents per pound. With pork at 4 cents a fair margin of profit will be left to the feeder. If you cannot control the market end of the business you can control the producing end. Pork made of 25c. potatoes never paid in this Island but one year in the last fifteen. "Concentrated intensive methods alone open the door for larger profit."—Dr. G. M. Twitchell.

ROOTS FOR SHEEP.—For sheep roots must be pulped. This is done best by a "root pulp," which every farmer who grows one acre of roots should possess. Sheep must have roots. Roots is the sine qua non of successful sheep husbandry. A breeding ewe should have at least five pounds of pulped roots per day, and she may profitably be fed as much as ten pounds per day. Roots and oat straw, with a feed of clover hay or pea straw at noon, is good feeding. The roots to be fed morning and evening, say at 9 and 3 o'clock. A bushel of roots morning and evening to a flock of twenty breeding ewes is fair feeding. If roots are fed freely to sheep in winter there will be no losing of the wool at this time of the year. For fattening lambs and sheep in winter roots are indispensable. In addition to the bill of fare given above, fattening lambs will require some ground grain, preferably ground barley, or ground barley and wheat bran. A pound per day will be ample. Fattening lambs in winter will be found very profitable if plenty of roots and barley are grown on the farm.

ROOTS FOR DAIRY COWS.—For cows giving milk, mangels are to be preferred as they never taste the milk. A bushel of mangels given in two feeds is a fair feeding for a cow giving milk. Turnips can be fed to milk cows freely, if the precaution is taken to feed just after milking. If the turnips are pulped and mixed with cut straw or hay, and fed thus mixed, no danger of tainting the milk need be apprehended. No doubt all roots fed to cattle should be pulped and mixed with cut feed to obtain the very best results. Carrots are strongly recommended for milk cows. They do not flavor the milk. The greatest danger of turnips flavoring milk is when fed in the fall and early winter, before they "mellow" or ripen. When fed any time after new year's there is little danger of turnip flavor. The Swede turnip is equal in nutritive qualities to the carrot and much higher in nutritive qualities than the mangel. In fact the mangel is only about equal to the English turnip in nutritive qualities. A bushel of roots with straw and a single feed of hay at noon make an acceptable ration with an addition of several pounds ground grain. For a cow giving milk, about 6 pounds grain of a mixture, will be sufficient, given in two feeds.

For fattening cattle and oxen weighing 1000 lbs. and over two bushels of roots per day will be none to much if the stable is warm and comfortable. Turnips and straw cut, or as the English say chaffed, with two or four quarts of oats will be a cheap and profitable ration for a fattening cattle beast. Boiled roots and ground grain, made into a mush and fed warm is the ideal morning ration for laying hens. This is the ration recommended by Prof. Gilbert of Ottawa. The writer makes this assertion: that the hope of the Island farmer to-day is dependent on roots! The only avenue of escape for the depressed Island farmer is by the root route. The farmer that will successfully grow two acres of roots the coming season is going to hold his head above water, and will as surely escape being ground to powder by the mills now busily employed grinding our poor non-progressive farmers into dust. These mills grind slowly but terribly sure.

ROOT RATION FOR HOGS.

90 lbs ground barley	80.	6.62	56.52

The above would be a fair ration for one day for 35 hogs of 150 lbs weight, and should make 40 to 50 pounds pork.
