

THE FAT IN

the food supplies warmth and strength; without it the digestion, the muscles, the nerves and the brain are weak, and general debility follows. But fat is hard to digest and is disliked by many.

Scott's Emulsion supplies the fat in a form pleasant to take and easy to digest. It strengthens the nerves and muscles, invigorates mind and body, and builds up the entire system.

PEKIN.

The history of Pekin is to be read in the walls which surround it in ruin or preservation, and if one traces them within and without the city they will show where lay the famous 'Manking' of the Khitan Tartars in 986; how the famous 'Golden Horde' of Kin Tartars laid out their capital of Chung Tu in 1151; what Ghengiz Khan and his Mongols thought a great city should be in 1215; how the immortal Kubla Khan constructed Khanbalik, 'the city of the Khan,' a century later—Polo calls it Cambaluc; and much more interesting history down to the advent of the present Manchus in 1644. And it is the walls, in excellent preservation, that mark the division of the Pekin of today—first the so-called 'Chinese,' or Outer City, more properly the Southern City; adjoining it is the Inner or 'Tartar City,' or Manchu properly Northern; inside this the 'Imperial City' and inside this again the 'Forbidden City,' the actual imperial residence itself. The ethnological distinctions of Chinese and Tartar are practically effaced; the only distinction for the flying visitor is that the shops are in the Chinese City, while most of the temples, public buildings, and 'sights,' together with all the foreign residences, are in the Tartar City, and that the wall of the latter is much the larger and more massive structure. The ground plan of Pekin is supposed to represent a human body, but it is better described as being laid out on the chess-board plan of American cities west of Chicago.

There are two great streets which intersect at a central point, and from all parts of these other streets, lanes and alleys run in straight lines. Every corner in Pekin seems to be a right angle; there are no winding thoroughfares. The houses are all very low, with flat roofs, and it is hard to see a single first-class Chinese dwelling-house in the whole city. But it is the streets of Pekin that strike the observer first, and fade last from his recollection. Whether wide or narrow, dark alley or main artery, they are entirely unpaved—the native alluvial soil and the native sewage from every Pekinese pathway. From this state of things spring several curious consequences. The roads are so uneven, the holes in them so numerous and deep, the ridges so high and steep, that no vehicle with springs can navigate half a mile. The only conveyance, therefore, is the famous springless Pekin cart, drawn by a mule. After a good shower of rain in Pekin, one cannot set foot out of doors; the mud is often three feet deep, and the centre of the street sometimes a couple of feet higher than the sides. But on the other hand, if no rain comes, there is the dust, and a Pekin dust storm once encountered is a dreadful memory forever. After a drought the dust is ankle-deep, every night at sunset it is watered with the liquid sewage of the city, and so it has come to be composed of dried, pulverized earth and dried pulverized fifth in about equal proportions. And when the storm comes one is blinded and choked by it; it penetrates one's clothing to the skin; windows and doors and curtains and covers do not stop it for an instant; people say it even finds its way into the air-tight boxes. So whether the barometer indicates 'rain' or 'fair' one is equally badly off.

"LEAGUE OF UNITED PATRIOTS."

Additional facts about the Chinese Boxers have been given by a correspondent of the London Times, who says:

1. Name.—The proper name of the society is I-ho-ch'uan, which may be translated "League of United Patriots." What is the origin of its popular designation, Boxers, is uncertain. This name may have been given them for the prominence its members appear to attach to gymnastics in their training, or by a pun on the last character in their Chinese name, ch'uan also meaning "fists"—the characters are different, but the pronunciation the same.

2. Origin.—The seizure of Kiaochau by Germany, as one of the measures of punishment for the murder of two Catholic missionaries in Shan-tung, and the consequent acquisition (practically seizure) of Port Arthur and Ta-lien Bay by Russia, of Wei-Hai-Wei by England, and of Kwang-Chau by France, gave rise to a general belief among the Chinese that the source of international complications lies in missionary propaganda, and that if missionaries and converts could be once got rid of things would run smoothly. This idea was availed of by Yu Man-tsi as the basis of his campaign of destruction in Szu-Chuan, and to a certain extent by the "Large Knife Society" in their uprising on the borders of Shang-tung, Anhwei and Kiang-su, although in the latter case death of food was also a large contributing (probably the main) factor. It is the same idea which has led to the present outbreak of the I-ho-ch'uan in Shan-tung, the province in which Kiaochau and Wei-Hai-Wei are situated and in which the railway development being pushed on from the former place has encountered so much opposition.

3. Objects.—It is not unnatural therefore that, as the China press reports the case, the society's flag should bear the device, "Uphold the dynasty. Drive out foreigners." It is also perhaps not unnatural—however mad the policy indicated by such a device may appear to us westerners—that at a time when great and widespread dissatisfaction was being openly expressed with the empress dowager's policy, not only throughout China but by Chinese domiciled abroad, a society which openly avowed the maintenance of the dynasty as one of its main objects should be viewed with favor by the reactionaries in Pekin. Yu-Hsien, the late governor, not only took no action to suppress the society at its institution, but by his behavior aided development, and little seems to have been done by the newly appointed governor, Yuan Shih Kai, and the foreign drilled troops he took with him to curb its action. Recent telegrams have told of the advance of these men on Pekin and of the destruction caused by them. In the Pechili camps there is a number of troops more than ample to suppress the movement, if they can be relied on to obey orders to do so. But can they? In popular outbreaks in China as the number of adherents increases the original object of the movement is very apt to be lost sight of; but if the I-ho-ch'uan acts up to its motto it is probable that sympathy with its object will prove stronger than discipline among the Manchu troops. And for the past two years Gen. Tung-Fu-shiang, who is high in favour in Pekin, and his truculent Kansuh troops, who were guilty of the attack on the engineers of the Pekin railroad some two years ago, had openly vowed that the policy advocated by the society's flag is that which they desire to carry out. Here lies the danger. No doubt the advance on Pekin will be scotched. But, unless the movement and its supporters be stamped out, these elements of disorder and of danger will remain scattered broadcast over the country, and the evil day will be only postponed.

What is Dr. Chase's Nerve Food?

In appearance Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is an oval, chocolate coated pill. In the condensed form it contains all of nature's most strengthening and invigorating tonic and restoratives and for this reason it is unapproached as a blood builder and nerve restorative. It cures all diseases caused by thin blood and exhausted nerves and makes pale, weak nervous men, women and children strong and healthy. 50 cents a box.
