The choir sang "Near the Cross."

MISCOCUCHE HOME AND SCHOOL

At the regular monthly meeting of the Miscouche Home and School Association held on Tuesday, Feb. 5th, the guest speaker was Mr. Murray Shanks, principal of the Stemon Park School. Mr. Shanks spoke on education and commented on the many definitions of the term, on the adjustments that must be made on the part of the child as well as by the school, on the tremendous task of the teacher, with so many pupils, both boys and girls, differing physically, mentally and emotionally.

"Many parents," he said, "probably do not realize the greatness of the teacher's task, developing the different skills, aptitudes, developing habits, and trying to fit the child for life." The speaker brought into his discussion the matter of school work, the pros and cons of the many work books used today, homework being abolished, and of rewards and punishments.

He wondered if parents expected too much from the teacher, if parents were handing some of their responsibilities over to the teacher. He said that the teacher's burden is getting heavier while the teaching profession is not appealing to so many in this present day.

Conditions, he thought, would be improved if the number of pupils the teacher had were lessened, if teachers were better trained, had higher qualifications and a salary was offered high enough to attract and keep in the profession the best that the country had to offer.

A hearty vote of thanks was presented to Mr. Shanks for his most interesting address. A very interesting discussion followed in which many took part, including Mr. D. H. Gallant, Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Martin, Mr. Martin DesRoches and members of the teaching staff.—S.

Deadly Growth In Canadian Shipments

YOKOHAMA, Japan, Feb. 18 (Reuters) — Health and Agricultural officials Friday complained that shipments of Canadian wheat arrived this week containing increased quantities of ergot, a deadly fungus growth.

They passed the shipments for human consumption, however, as the proportion of ergot was below danger level.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted and eight members answered roll call. The financial report was read and showed a balance of 270.35.

Correspondence included a letter from Marjaret Wisner, zone chairman of the M.H.A.A., asking that all Aids start classes in "First Aid" and a letter from Mrs. G. T. Purdy, Truro, N.S., giving an account of the 9th annual meeting of the M.H.A.A. which was held at St. Andrews, N.B.

It was moved and seconded the Aid give $250.00 to the hospital fund. A card party was planned to take place on Wednesday evening, Feb. 13th, in the laundry of the hospital. A get-well card was to be sent a member, also a sympathy card to a bereaved member. On motion the meeting adjourned. Refreshments were served by the hospital staff.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS

sponse to any form of correction. The only way you can put your finances on a sound basis is to agree mutually on a budget for hubby's sports, and one for your own personal expenditures. These amounts should not come out of savings, but be budgeted along with regular household expenses.

Your husband's lavish display of expensive equipment is misleading to the neighbors. You probably think he has unlimited money to spend. If you know these people very well, you might drop a gentle hint to the effect that you'd like a little more of your husband's time, attention and money.

The expenses that come along with a new baby may also act as a deterrent to your sportsman's spending.

DEAR MISS DIX: When I was married two years ago, I did not love my husband, but yielded to his pleading and promising. Now I discover that all his promises were empty. I have no faith in him. He is insanely jealous and won't let me have a friend, yet he continues to see his. I have been a good, faithful wife but am miserable over the treatment I get. Should I stay with my husband or get separate maintenance?

ANSWER: Is your husband entirely at fault? You married him without love, and have probably never let him forget it. Since he knows you don't love him, he can scarcely be blamed for suspecting you may love someone else. You made a bad bargain, then didn't have the gallantry to stick by it. If you can't bring love to a marriage, there is little you deserve to get from it.

Under the circumstances, I can see where you're even entitled to separate maintenance, but since the law has its own rulings on that subject, better let it dispose of your case. Both you and your husband will be happier apart, under the unfortunate circumstances existing.

DEAR MISS DIX: My late husband, who was an invalid for many years, passed away six months ago. Our two children are both married and I live alone. An old friend of ours, a widower of many years, has asked me to marry him. I have very strong feelings for him, trust and respect him thoroughly, so I am sure we will enjoy a happy life together. He has no children, and mine wholeheartedly approve of the proposed marriage. Our mutual friends, too, we are sure, will be pleased. There is only one thing we feel uncertain about. With due respect to my late husband, when will good taste permit me to remarry?

ANSWER: It is pleasant, indeed, to know of two people who can enter the last years of their lives with so much happiness and contentment around them. While a year is considered the proper elapsed time between widowhood and a new marriage, shorter periods are not unusual. The six months since your husband's death is a sufficiently long wait, especially since the coming marriage has such unqualified approval of all immediately concerned. Bless you both, and may you have many years of happiness ahead.

Ellen's Diary

Continued from page 2 and knee on axe on one of the black-painted and orange kitchen chairs, commenced the sharpening. It is sometimes a quiet chore, he keeping, we suspect, thoughts on the afternoon ahead. How many more pieces will be needed to effect the intended change in "the horse-barn" come spring? A blown roof has made James skeptical of building. "It's all very well to say, on a fine summer day like this" we overheard him comment to the younger farmer last year, in a consultation which had to do with adding extra braces to the building, "that it's pretty strong. But will it stand the storms and hurricanes of years?"

Today, however, James chatted as we close by in the pantry washed the dinner dishes. "We're making quite a clearance back there, Ellen," he offered. "Yes, the woodland is backing away. But there'll always be plenty. . . You didn't happen to listen in to the farm-markets, did you, Ellen? Prices dropping yet? Too bad isn't it? It will make a mess of things. . . curtail production for one thing. . . no one can afford these years to operate at a loss. And if a farmer is barely getting by, if he has no cash to spend, what then? If he can't buy machinery or feed? If he can't pay for labor? If he can't meet his interest?"

A long pause in the whetting indicated the tool had now a keen cutting edge. And cap picked up, and mitts from the warming-oven and wedge from the mantle, he was off to join the younger farmer in the trek to the woodlands. "Men just don't care about anything, do they?" granddaughter offered, coming by then. "They sharpen axes that leave dark spots on the floor. . . and step off, leaving their women to clean after them. But I suppose" she commented "it wouldn't be much fun sitting beside a cold stove, would it?"

Until tomorrow . . . —Diary— Good-night . . .
