ELLEN'S DIARY

Moonlight At Alderlea Washes Fields In Silver

"How good this March-month is!" we say, enjoying the lengthening lovely days, with their warming sunslight and the baring fields. We enjoy too the nights with their starshine and quiet, and the moonlight washing the farmlands in silver.

"You should come out and see how pretty the night is!" Mack smiled this evening. "It's almost as bright as by day."

But we already knew-had seen it from a window. Had admired the tapestry of countryside reaching about: the dark traceries of branches that catch stars for us through the night, and by day hold robins' nests dark against the bright of the sunny sky; had seen the houses, that which sits modestly across the lane from this, and that which tops the hill on the far side of the stream, both content in the moonlight. Lights in windows, smokes rising from the hearthfires.

But to come to a verandah or yard to look out at a reach of countryside is a privilege given to folks of the farms. How serene it was when we came with him then! No breath of wind stirred. No sound in the wide silence obtaining. But listen! Was that the hunting call of an owl?

"I'd say," Mack offered, "that is from the high grove. It's a good sign. I'll be able to ride my bicycle to school tomorrow," he smiled.

And there echoing lonelily in thin yelps over the fields Was that some dog of a farm? Rob's "Sandy" perhaps?

"It's a fox!" Mack exclaimed. "I do hope he wanders into a trap. We don't want to have him around when the ewes and lambs go out to pasture this spring. . . Did you know, I saw one this very evening, when I was coming home from school? Yes, over on the other side of the stream-in that field," he nodded.

At Alderlea, through our years as its mistress, changes have come slowly to this old house. Maybe this was because it came second to the barns in the busy-ness of the farming. Or perhaps it was that as the years passed we became increasingly content with the home as it was, pleased with its sheltering roof and its rooms as they were.

Today however saw the latched wooden stormdoors removed from the kitchen entrances and modern "combinations" set in their stead. The carpenter drew the rusted nails from the ancient hinges and set each door, we fancied, rather reverently aside.

"Fairly old, these are," he observed.

"Yes," James nodded, "old! Do you know I have only a vague recollection of seeing the newer one built and put in place? The other," he smiled, "must have come with the house!"

"Many a storm and hard-time beat against them," we offered.

"They saw us through depressions in the farming and through the wars' years," James remembered. "Let's hope the new ones will know only days of peace."

New stormdoors came to this old kitchen today. . .And a new day we shall have with the dawning.

Until tomorrow — — Diary— Good-night. . .

MARY HAWORTH

Husband Is Concerned About Jealous Mother

Dear Mary Haworth: My problem is, of all people, my mother- I wonder if this situation is unique; or if other men have had the same problem?

My wife is a fine woman, a good mother and a neat housekeeper. We have three young children and are happy except for mother's continual criticism of my wife, since mother moved to our town and settled on our street.

Mother's continual gripe is making a nervous wreck of me and I am afraid I am irritable with my family sometimes, through no fault of their own. I cannot bring myself to tell my wife these things and I feel like a heel.

Mother actually appears to be jealous of our happiness. Also she seems to hate my wife's few relatives, who never bother her. Have you any advice for me?— J.K.

Dear J. K.: As long ago as World War 2, Dr. Edward A Strecker wrote a book about women who mangle their sons' manhood, in just such ways as your mother is wrecking yours.

The title of the book is "Their Mothers' Sons." It was published by Lippincott's in 1946. A foreword by the late Eugene Meyer says. in part:

"On April 27, 1945, Dr. Edward A. Strecker delivered a lecture before several hundred medical students and physicians at the Bellevue Hospital in New York City.

"The lecture, now popularly and controversially known as 'the Mom lecture,' was the first in a memorial lectureship established at the bequest of Dr. Menas S. Gregory. . .Dr. Strecker pulled no punches in indicting 'Mom' for her sins of commission and omission against her children. . .

"Dr. Strecker's background gives him the right to speak," wrote Mr. Meyer. "As a well known practising psychiatrist, as chairman of the Psychiatry Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and as consultant to the Secretary of War. . .he has seen case histories of many thousands of psychoneurotics. . .

"What has caused this large number of psychoneurotics among our young men ... almost 3,000,000 either rejected or otherwise lost to the national defense. .?

"The story was not new to Dr. Strecker," Mr. Meyer continues. "For many years, in the practise of psychiatry in public hospitals and privately, he had seen the handiwork of Moms. . ."

He was familiar with the emotional destruction wrought by the jealous, possessive, interfering Mom who insidiously denies her son the right to face life, form good relationships, think for himself and stand on his own feet.

"It was Dr. Strecker's observations in World War 2," says Mr. Meyer, "that crystallized his opinions into a warning, which he felt he should give the nation." And so he wrote the book "Their Mothers' Sons"— not only to open Mom's eyes; but also to show Mom's sons how to fight for their souls.

Now for advice: First, read Dr. Strecker's book. Second, confide in your wife exactly how you feel about your mother's crank behavior and the harm she is doing you and your household. This will amount to cutting the umbilical cord, that is presently strangling you. It will give you a start towards becoming a man in relation to the problem of your mother's rule-or-ruin policy.

Your mother hates your wife because she is intimately sharing your life, and for no other reason. If you try to remain neutral in that situation, you are unfit for marriage, in my opinion. Take sides with your wife, unabashedly; thereby letting your mother see that she is making a problem for herself that she alone must solve; and that she cuts herself off from you until she does. M.H.

Easily Prepared Croquettes For Lenten Luncheon

Seafood croquettes are a happy choice for a Lenten luncheon. Elegant but thrifty, they are easy to prepare now that electric deep-fat fryers have become common.

Like many other good things to eat, croquettes originated in France. The word, croquette, comes from the French word, crunch. Crisp and crunchy on the outside, yet soft and delectable on the inside. Seafood-Almond Croquettes are a new taste treat developed by the home economists of Canada's Department of Fisheries.

SEAFOOD - ALMOND CROQUETTES

2 cups cooked or canned fish or shellfish
3 tablespoons butter, melted
¼ cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
1 cup milk
2 eggs
¾ cup blanched chopped almonds
1 tablespoon minced onion
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon water
Fine dry bread crumbs

Drain fish or shellfish; mince. Combine melted butter, flour, and seasonings. Add milk gradually and cook until thick and smooth, stirring constantly. Beat 1 egg; add a little of hot sauce to it; blend with remaining sauce, stirring constantly over low heat for 1 minute. Remove from heat and add fish, almonds, onion, parsley and lemon juice; mix well. Chill.

Shape into croquettes of one-quarter cup size. For shaping, croquettes are usually rolled into balls first, then formed into cones, rolls or flat cakes. Beat remaining egg lightly with water. Coat croquettes with crumbs, beaten egg, and again with crumbs. Let stand for 30 minutes to set coating. Place in wire basket and fry in hot deep fat (375 deg. F.) for about 2 minutes, or until golden brown. Drain on absorbent paper. Makes 10 croquettes.
