Dominicans' Civil War Began Four Years Ago

By ROBERT BERRELLEZ
SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP)—Dominicans are engaged in a bloody civil war that actually began four years ago this month and to which there is no foreseeable end.
It is being fought in the long shadow that Generalissimo Rafael L. Trujillo still casts over the Dominican scene.
This is the view of some international diplomats who are fearful, as are some Latin American diplomats here, that any peace effort that does not call for and enforce the total disarmament of the civilian population will be only temporary.
Thousands of civilians—even children—were handed weapons and ammunition by military officers who overthrew the civilian junta of Donald Reid Cabral a week ago in an attempt to bring former president Juan D. Bosch back to power.
"If a peace arrangement is made, these arms will be hidden for future use," said a businessman, recalling that three years ago former president Ulysses Hereaux also armed the civilian population and there was no peace for the next 20 years.
MUCH AT STAKE
There appears to be too much at stake in the present conflict to guarantee other than a general peace agreement without the necessary safeguards, these diplomats fear.
At the heart of the civil war is a genuine quest by most Dominicans for freedom from despotism that has ruled this country for most of its 121 years.
The trouble is that this hope is inextricably linked to the thirst for the political and economic power that Trujillo held for 31 years until he was slain in May, 1961.
Corruption, violence and lack-luster leadership have marked the post-Trujillo period, which up to the present has known four different governments and seven heads of state.

Whale Is Predicted To Be Extinct Soon

SANDEFJORD, Norway (AP)—One of the earth's last giant animals, the whale, may soon become extinct as the dedo.
It appears that unless the whale hunting nations agree to more drastic restriction on catches and find ways of conserving stock the whale will join the dinosaur in oblivion.
Whale oil was once the source of great fortunes. It was an important ingredient for food products such as oleomargarine and for soaps and perfumes.
The change from sail to steam, the introduction of the harpoon gun and building of scientifically equipped factory ships cut heavily into the whale population.
Now chemists have found substitutes for many of the whale oil byproducts.
This year's whaling reports from three nations seem to indicate that the last chapter may have begun for the whale and whaling.
NO SOLUTION LIKELY
Most sources here said they do not think the meeting of the International Whaling Commission in London starting on Monday will be able to resolve the problem of how to preserve the stock of whales.
The whale is a mammiferous animal. Each female whale is able to bring up only one baby a year.
"There is no hope ever of bringing the whale stock up to full profitable capacity again," Lars Christensen, 81—a leading whaling pioneer with more than 60 years of experience—said in an interview.
He has therefore given up whaling and built a fleet of modern liners.
Whaling in Arctic and Antarctic waters has been one of Norway's basic sources of income for the last 100 years. When Norwegian whaling was at its highest level with regard to equipment and output of oil—in 1930-31—a total of 10,300 Norwegians were engaged in Antarctic whaling.

If a defender illegally exposes a card, it becomes a penalty card which must be played at the first legal opportunity.
This hand occurred during the nationals in Phoenix, Ariz. in 1962. At one table the bidding went as shown. West's four no-trump bid was conventional and asked partner to bid clubs or spades.
East obliged with five spades, which West raised to six. When this bid came around to South, he decided to chance seven diamonds.

Last season only 1,857 Norwegians participated.
The number of whales killed throughout the world rose from 14,200 in 1925-26 to 40,200 in 1930-31 and to 64,489 in 1958-59.
But last season Norway had only four floating factories with a total of 36 catchers at sea. Japan had seven floating factories with 78 catchers. The Soviet Union had four floating factories with 68 catchers.
It has not yet been decided whether any Norwegian whalers will make the voyage to the opposite side of the globe to catch whales next season, as they have done for 60 years.
Japanese and Soviet whalers, however, are expected to stay on and fight for the last whale, one whaling source said.
