Epps's Cocoa

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for our breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified by pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THEATRES OF OUR ANCESTORS.

Gestures, Moans, and Cries Were Prominent in Their Days.

In the Revue des Deux Mondes of the 15th of December, M. Jusserand, the well-known authority on mediæval England, describes the theatre in mediæval England and how they went to the play. The great object of early English dramatists and actors was to make their audiences laugh, and gesture was thought highly of, both in places of amusement and in church. The very preachers, we are told, essayed to express their thoughts more clearly by imitating the groans and cries of those martyrs whose deaths they were describing. The people, observes one historian, when going to church thought they were going to the theatre; instead of thinking of their prayers, occupied themselves with looking at the antics of the preacher.

The Irish wake seems to have had many a predecessor in "Merrie England." Extraordinary scenes used to go on in the churchyards both before and after a body was laid to rest. The Bishop of Winchester had to issue an order forbidding "dishonest games in the cemeteries, especially on high days and holidays." Both in villages and cities there was a craze for pageants; a death, a wedding, a departure for the Holy Land, was made an excuse for bringing out the finest clothes and uniforms, and organizing a procession, of which giants, dwarfs, gilded animals and flower-bedecked cars formed part. As all the world knows, the first plays ever acted were miracle plays; they took place during four great church feasts of the year, especially at Christmas and Easter. In Chaucer's time these "Mysteries" were immensely popular, and there is constant allusion to them in the "Canterbury Tales." For centuries every drama was composed from some incident in the Bible or in church history, and each scene was laid either in Rome or in Palestine, or in the Garden of Eden, for Adam and Eve, the serpent and the angel, were very popular dramatis personæ. It was during the fourteenth century that a fresh kind of play styled "Moralities," began to take the place of the religious drama. These comedies were still supposed to have some good end in view, and as befitted their title each dialogue had a moral tucked away in the tail of it. Yet the miracle-play did not cease to exist in Europe till much later. William Shakespeare was already 15 years of age when the Archbishop of York forbade the further performance of the "Mysteries," which had at one time made the town so famous; and Molière had already been dead three years when religious dramas were forbidden in France by orders of the king, Louis XIV.

Fashions Among the Ainus.

The dress of civilized nations is often sufficiently ridiculous, but our own oddities do not render us the less disposed to laugh at the oddities of other people. This being true, we can afford to be amused by Mr. Howard's description of the clothing worn—in cold weather—by the hairy Ainus, those strange little inhabitants of farther Siberia and part of Japan.

The only material of which they ever have a complete suit is fish skin. Such a suit is sometimes elaborately, though coarsely, embroidered. The resemblance between this embroidery and that of North American Indians is remarkable.

How the fish-skin is prepared is still a puzzle to me. Though pretty thin, it is very tough, and has more pliability than might be thought possible. Shoes even are made with it but not exclusively of it; it generally forms the linings of the uppers.

The thicker clothing is grotesqueness itself. For medium garments, especially for the covering of the back and chest, birch bark is used, other materials being stitched to it. For the coldest weather the clothing is much like that of the Eskimos and the Kamtschatdales. The grotesqueness of it arises not so much from its shapes as from the variety of the materials.

In one of these Joseph's coat dresses were mixed patches of sable, bear, deer and fox-skins, including the tails, in haphazard fragments, while behind and before there was underneath all these a large piece of birch bark. The bark, I afterward found, was intended incidentally as a protection against accidental shots from poisoned arrows, which the Ainus use more in winter than in summer in their hunting excursions.

A New Phase of The Great Fair.

In the last number of the Entomological News Professor Smith refers to a grave danger that the Columbian Exposition has menaced the farmers with. He points out the fact that the grain in the "Palace of Agriculture" was seriously infected with the grain-moth, and that from this centre the whole country may be invaded by this pest. In the New Jersey exhibit we are told that "every jar of grain was simply a nest of moths and larvæ, and that everywhere the same appearance prevailed; that in fact the whole building had become one vast breeding ground for these insects. In view of the fact that not only this out other, perhaps equally injurious, insects have found in the same manner a centre from which to scatter, he wonders whether the results may not yet lead some to pronounce the Fair an unmitigated nuisance. Some of the foreign plants may have been the means of introducing new insects that, by finding in this country favorable habitats, will scatter and multiply to the disgust and annoyance of agriculturists generally. New weeds may also have in this way gained entrance. As mimicry is a marked human characteristic it will not be surprising if the vices of other nations are not copied here and an epidemic of new forms of immorality prevail.

A Word to the Unwise.

Care should always be observed in washing children's faces not to let the soap get into the eyes. A physician writes: I think it cruel to allow the face and eyes to be washed over with soap in the coarse and rough way in which I have often seen it done. Some nurses appear to take a sort of morbid delight in its employment in this way. Even to an adult, soap in the eyes is a very painful ordeal to go through; in the end it inevitably produces chronic, sometimes acute ophthalmia. Children should be spared this barbarity. In washing chindren's faces with soap a fine flannel, a sponge, or the corner of a towel should be used.—Hall's Journal of Health.

J. H. BRICKWOOD'S CASE

A Government Official and his Rheumatism Cured by 12 boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills—Sets all the people asking Questions of the Druggists.

Kingston March, 12.—The fact that rheumatism is caused by diseased Kidney's, has been conclusively proved by the case of Mr. J. H. Brickwood, fishery inspector for this district. He suffered from rheumatism for fifteen years and found no cure in the prescriptions of doctors or in patent medicines. Finally, he used Dodd's Kidney Pills, 12 boxes of which cured him. Harry Wade, the well known druggist here, who said Mr. Brickwood the pills, says he is overrun with inquiries as the genuineness of Mr. Brickwood's story, of which he is able to satisfy everyone. He also reports large sales of the pills with most satisfactory results in every case.

BRITISH REVERSE IN INDIA.

Some Details of the Disastrous Affair.

Despatches received from the locality where the columns are engaged in punishing Arbor tribesmen, announce serious losses by the British. An additional detachment of 200 men left Sadyah on the 8th, to meet the British expedition commanded by Capt. Maxwell, which for some time has been following up the retreating tribesmen. The Arbor's received reinforcements from a tribe inhabiting that part of the Himalyas recently and assumed the offensive. According to native reports Captain Maxwell was unable to reach Damron, the town he has for some time been endeavoring to capture, and was forced to retreat, losing a number of men, killed and wounded. He destroyed the fortified camps he occupied during the forward march of the expedition. These native reports state he is now in a very serious position almost surrounded by rebellious tribesmen.

Another despatch received from Gefhatty, the chief town of Asiam, says a detached party composed of 30 rifles and four British officers operating as an escort to a train, were on the way to Borda with provisions and ammunition for the garrison. The detachment encountered no resistance until far beyond reach of succor from its base of operations. Then the tribesmen began to gather ahead of it and on its flanks, keeping up a galling fire, which eventually brought the troops to a standstill. A fortified position was constructed out of wagons, etc., which formed part of the train. For two days a continuous fight was kept up, day and night. Eventually the British soldiers were surrounded by thousands of tribesmen, and killed to a man.
