LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Liquor Traffic.

SIR,—It is high time that something should be done in order to regulate the liquor traffic in Charlottetown. No one can ignore the havoc this traffic must certainly make in the course of time, if permitted to continue without restraint. If our citizens are persuaded to this, then it is their sacred duty to adopt every legitimate means in their power to avert the coming danger, and, consequently, if effective legislation can be obtained for the purpose of curtailing the traffic as much as possible, no citizen should deny his support to such legislation, but should endeavor to lend it his hearty support.

Now, as the local parliament will meet in the course of a few days, I think it proper that, under the present existing circumstances, our representatives should pass a license law of a most stringent nature, not only with regard to the persons to whom a license might be granted, but also respecting the quality of liquors sold. For a great many of the so-called beverages which are now sold, if permitted, serve only as a general term for the more intoxicating liquors.

As a matter of course, the advocates of the Scott Act will disagree with me on this point; but I fail to see wherein they should complain. It is evident that the Scott Act was a failure in Charlottetown; that during its existence the number of liquor shops had almost without number increased and multiplied in our locality Hence, there is no wonder that our citizens, becoming alarmed at the existing state of affairs, had voted for the repeal of the Act, with the hope of obtaining more efficient legislation under the form of a license law, as described above.

And, verily, if we institute a comparison between the extent of the traffic as it was under the Scott Act and as it is at present, very little difference, if any, is discernible, at least so far as effects are concerned, notwithstanding the fact that the town and country were of late in an almost continual state of political turmoil, of which whiskey has become of late years so powerful a confederate. For example, during the month of May of the present year the number of convictions for drunkenness and disorder was 22. This is under the system of free rum. During the same month last year the number for the same offence was 23—thus showing a smaller number under free rum than under the Scott Act. Now, as everyone should admit, if the increase or decrease of disorder follows the increase or decrease of drunkenness, is it not evident that even without any restrictive law we are in no worse condition than when the Act was in force? There can, therefore, be no doubt as to the legitimate conclusion of the above comparison, that is, that the Scott Act, as it was in Charlottetown, was a dead law and if the present system of free rum should be abolished—and it should certainly be abolished—for the same reason the Scott Act rightly deserved abolition, for their effects were one and the same.

Seeing, therefore, the moral danger to which many of our citizens are exposed, should not our parliament come to the rescue and enact a law which would at least effectively diminish this nefarious traffic? A license law, I admit, will not completely abolish drunkenness. Nor does it pretend to do so. But it is certain that, if properly framed, it will do as much as it pretends it can do. It will at least lessen the number of drinking dens; it will compel licensed tavern keepers to close their houses at seasonable hours; it will remove many stumbling blocks which cause the destruction of our citizens, and thus the traffic will be placed more directly under the hand of the law. This is more than the free rum system can effect, and it is equally certain that the Scott Act never effected it in this city although it made higher pretensions. But, as far as our welfare is concerned, it is not by what a law pretends to achieve that we are to judge it, but by what a law does actually achieve, and consequently, since we know from experience that during the existence of the Scott Act in our city, the number of liquor shops has annually increased, and it is only reasonable that our local Legislature should give us a license law as a more efficient means of remedying the evil.

It may perhaps be agued that if the civic representation were reformed the Scott Act would achieve that which it was calculated to achieve. I admit that civic reform is necessary in order to give a fair representation to the city, but even in this case the Scott Act would fail to afford an efficient remedy, (1) because a majority of our citizens has already decided against the Act, and if they follow logically, they would decide against a city council that would favor the Act; (2) because even if they should elect a council in favor of the Act, there are too many loop-holes in the Act itself by which the guilty are permitted to evade the law, thus rendering the Act useless. For we know by experience that out of ten or twelve prosecutions for the violation of the Act, the ordinary number of convictions did not exceed two or three.

But again it will be said that the passing of a license law is the same as advocating an evil. In answer, it may be said with as much propriety that to deny a license law is also the same as to advocate an evil, and a greater evil than would be incurred under a license law. For by denying the city a license law, permission is practically given to any and every citizen, without discrimination of character, to sell intoxicating liquors—to sell by day, to sell by night, to sell to drunkards and rowdies of every description, while on the contrary, if a proper license law were enacted, the authorities would be careful not to grant a license except to careful responsible persons who could safely be trusted If, therefore, we stand face to face with two evils, one or the other of which, under the circumstances, is inevitable, is it right that we should choose the greater evil in order to avoid the lesser? It is therefore to be hoped that our local representatives will not overlook the importance of having a stringent license law passed, by which the citizens of Charlottetown may be delivered from the dangers which for the past few years have been hanging over them.

By Beer & Sprague—Sch Fanny Young, potatoes and oats, for Halifax.

In addition to the above, Messrs. Poole & Thompson, of this port, have this season shipped two cargoes of cattle from Georgetown.

Business at Montague Bridge is fairly brisk this season.

There are a number of new dwellings in course of erection. Mr. D. McKay is building a large store, which he intends to fit up for a boot and shoe store. John H. McLean, of the firm of McLean & Son, is building a pretty cottage. Mr. Alex. Campbell is also erecting a neat residence. Mr. Donald McLeod, tanner, is also building a hotel and a livery stable. George Wightman, Esq, has also commenced operations in his shipyard, where he has erected a large house for his workmen. He intends to build a vessel of about 250 tons, D. S. McLaren, foreman.

The firm of Poole and Thompson are shipping and handling large quantities of lumber.

Mr. John A. Stewart, harness manufacturer, has a very good assortment of all kinds of harness, and does a brisk trade.

The Montague Drug Store looks neat and is well stocked.

A post office savings bank has recently been established in the post office building, at Montague, which will, no doubt, be a great boon to the inhabitants of these localities.

The carriage building establishment of John McLean & Son is one of the best, if not the best, in the county. Their showrooms are resplendent with a variety of carriages, for make-up and finish cannot be surpassed on the Island, outside of town, and superior in many respects to the imported article.

Mr. D. L. McKinnon's furniture warerooms are well stocked with a good selection of household furniture.

The manufacturers and mechanics here are all busily engaged in their several callings. The mercantile establishments also report business good.

The schools here are in a healthy condition, under the tuition of an active corps of experienced teachers.

The church people and temperance advocates have no doubt gained a victory here, as some of the most inveterate dealers in "stagger juice" and "tangle-foot," have left the village for parts unknown.

Montague Bridge, which should now be called Montague Centre, is a busy little mart, and long may it continue to flourish.

OBSERVER.

Montague, June 10.

A Girl Burglar Sentenced.

LIZZIE WITHERELL GETS TEN YEARS AT HARD LABOR.

Ten years at hard labor in the House of Correction at East Cambridge was the sentence imposed by Judge Blodgett in the case of Lizzie Witherell, the daring female burglar and chlorotormer, in the Middlesex Superior Criminal Court at East Cambridge, Mass., a few days ago.

On the night of February 27 this young woman, scarcely 20 years of age, broke into the residence of Mrs. Annie Colley, No. 21 Magazine St., Cambridgeport, and, after several ineffective attempts to chloroform that lady, as she lay in bed, fled the premises, but not until she had ransacked a dresser in the chamber and taken articles of jewelry amounting to more than $1,000 in value.

She appeared more at ease as she sat immovable in the dock than the spectators. Mrs. Colley testified that Lizzie was formerly a domestic in her employ, whom she discharged because of neglect in the performance of duties. She said that four weeks later, or on the night of February 27, she was awakened from a sound slumber by noises in her chamber. She could distinctly see the shadow of a person on the wall. When accosted, this person sprang upon her.

"I saw then," continued the witness, "who my assailant was. With one hand she held me down on the bed, while with the other she applied a moistened handkerchief to my nose, which contained chloroform.

Witness said that the prisoner told her to prepare for death, as she came with the fixed purpose of murdering her. "She told me," continued the witness, "that should I make the least resistance or outcry my brains would be scattered about the room, and she put one hand menacingly in her ulster pocket. She demanded that I surrender the jewels which she knew I had in my dresser, saying that the slightest hesitancy on my part would cause my death. I pointed to where the articles were kept, and for the moment swooned away. When I regained consciousness the girl had gone from the room."

Officer Neilson testified to having been attracted to the house by Mrs. Colley. When asked if she had anything to say before sentence was imposed the prisoner answered defiantly, "No," and took her sentence with as much calmness as though it were an invitation for a ride in the park.
