

Ask Educational Film Support

FREDERICTON, N.B. (CP)—At the annual meeting of the New Brunswick Federation of Film Councils, it was decided to prepare a brief requesting financial assistance from the provincial government for the promotion of adult-educational films for adults.

Commenting on the proposal, chairman W. T. F. Johnston, Saint John, president of the provincial organization, said that the need for adult-educational films and religious or special films could not be met by the two standard sources of supply—the audio-visual bureau and the National Film Board.

"By obtaining the backing of church, labor and industrial groups and organizations such as the home and school, IODE, Junior chamber of commerce and other groups, we will be able to help meet their needs."

The military implication of the Russian satellite on the present U.S. defense establishment and its future development.

A. It is another indication of the ever-growing importance of space weapons. Ten or 15 years from now space superiority will have taken the place of today's air superiority.

Q. Under International Geophysical Year agreement, knowledge learned by space satellites will be shared fully. How useful knowledge learned by Russia's Sputniks is in developing or accelerating our satellite program? And in what particular ways?

A. We expect to learn from the Sputniks, with and without Soviet collaboration, quite a few things with regard to the shape of the earth, transoceanic mapping and survey, mass distribution within the earth, and density of the uppermost layers of the atmosphere.

This type of information can be gleaned by tracking Sputnik's orbit and its ultimate fiery destruction by re-entry into the atmosphere.

In the missile field today, we have practically all the facilities we can intelligently use. Several projects are handled by several teams, each of which is in a different geographical location. Any attempt to dislocate or combine those teams must, necessarily, lead to immediate interruption of the work, with resultant delays.

A strong national management of our ballistic missile and space flight program is certainly highly desirable. Since 1951 there has been the institution of a 25-called guided missile car on the level of the department of defense.

I believe that if only the position of this missile car could be strengthened, to the effect that he could back up long-range plan- ning and development projects on and off the laurel, depending on the shifting situation with regard to budget and priority.

It's a Gerenuk

A friendly little fellow is the gerenuk, an African antelope, who daintily goes for leaves from Dr. John L. George of the Bronx, N.Y. ... The annual, rare event in Africa, is about 40 inches high at the shoulders, but his long neck makes him six feet high at the horns. It is one of the few gerenuks ever brought to North America.

Reviews Sputnik Program From The Military Aspect

(Copyright 1957 by the AP) The Associated Press has obtained the following exclusive question and answer exchange with Mr. Wendell van Braun, director of the development operations division at the U.S. Army's Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Ala. The questions relate to the military aspects of the Sputnik program and the future of space in general.

Q. How do you account for the U.S.S.R.'s apparent ability to outstrip the United States in reaching space?

A. The main reason is that the United States had no ballistic missile program worth mentioning between 1945 and 1951. These six years during which the Russians obviously laid the groundwork for their large rocket program, are irretrievably lost.

Thus our present dilemma is not due to the fact that they are not working hard enough now but that we did not work first hard enough during the first six to 10 years after the war.

Q. How long before it will be possible for the United States to launch a rocket to the moon?

A. Yes, in order to return the orbiting satellite into the atmosphere, it must be retarded by a short rocket blast. Once the orbital orbit has been accurately determined by optical and radio tracking, it is easy to calculate how much the orbital speed must be reduced in order to place the satellite on the lowest point of the new orbit into the uppermost layers of the atmosphere—say 50 miles up.

After the satellite has thus been slowed down sufficiently, a parachute may be deployed to carry it safely to the ground.

Q. In view of Russian developments, U.S. research and U.S. efforts would be directed?

A. We should pursue a well-planned and coordinated research and development program covering all aspects of human flight through outer space.

Q. Do you believe a consolidated program, such as the Manhattan atomic bomb project, would improve our development program?

A. We should not lose sight of the fact that there are some fundamental differences between the situation which led to the Man-

Men and equipment were working on the road in hopes bodies might have been spilled out of the houses before rubble and debris came to rest in the creek. There were seven deaths. One body that of a child, was recovered earlier.
