Canadian Cost Of Living Reaches New High In July

By WILLIAM NEVILLE

OTTAWA (CP) — The traditional mid-summer upsurge in food prices pushed Canadian living costs to a new high in July, the bureau of statistics reported Thursday.

It was the ninth consecutive month-to-month increase in consumer costs.

The bureau set the consumer price index, the nation's main cost-of-living gauge, at a July level of 139.5, up from 139 a month earlier. The index, based on 1949 prices, stood at 136.2 a year ago.

The bureau bases its figures on surveys made in the early days of each month.

As is customary, the June-to-July increase was attributed almost completely to burgeoning food costs. Price changes in other areas were fractional and had little impact on the over-all situation.

The food index, however, continued its summer upswing with increased prices reported for a wide variety of meats, fruits and vegetables.

Government economists said the increases were "in line with the normal seasonal pattern" representing the lull between large spring market movements and the emergence on the retail market of late-summer "local" crops. The result is a heavier-than-usual reliance on imported products, especially fresh fruits and vegetables, and an accompanying impact on prices because of generally higher United States price levels.

EXPECT DECREASE

If the normal pattern holds, however, food costs will show an equally substantial decrease over the next three months as Canadian supplies pick up. Last year, for example, the food index rose to 135.4 in July from 131.2 in May, but then quickly declined to 131 by October.

While living costs continued to climb, latest bureau figures on industrial wages and salaries showed no change between April and May. This index remained steady May 1 at 219.8, up from 202 a year earlier.

The June-to-July report on living costs raised the food index to 139 from the previous month's 137.6. This component stood at 135.4 in July, 1964. Price increases were reported for such items as beef, pork, potatoes, celery, turnips, tomatoes, grapes, bananas, tea, eggs, margarine and butter. These more than offset lower costs for lettuce, cabbage, strawberries, grapes, sugar, oranges and ice cream.

Bureau officials said their basic survey of 10 regional cities showed the average price of sirloin steaks up to $1.14 a pound in July from June's $1.08. Ten pounds of potatoes cost $1.12 compared with June's $1.03; six grapefruit were priced on the national average at 79 cents versus 71 a month earlier; and celery was going at 18 cents a pound, up two cents from June.

On the brighter side, strawberry prices fell to 41 cents a pint from June's 37, while cabbage was down to 14 cents a pound compared with 20 a month earlier.

COMPOSERS PROTEST

LONDON (Reuters)—Britain's classical composers protested Thursday that "ear-tickling" rock 'n' roll tunes were driving their music off the air. The Composers' Guild said it would seek an independent inquiry by the radio and television safety guards committee.

What's the use of advertising?

well, it makes Sally Campbell's life a lot easier

Advertising, it's been said, keeps trying to foist off on us a lot of things we don't need. Like refrigerators, freezers, electric floor polishers—and automatic washers.

It's true we don't absolutely have to have these things. In a sense, they're luxury items. But just try to tell Sally Campbell or any other housewife, that her automatic washer is a luxury.

Oh, we could probably get along without cars and vacuum cleaners and electric lights if we had to. Millions of people did for many thousands of years. But why should we? Is scientific progress something that should be kept secret?

Advertising, you see, is just a way of letting all of us know what's new and different and better in the world today. It's a way of telling us about the things that can help make our lives a little easier, a lot more fun.

And when you buy an automatic washer, a new refrigerator, or a car, you raise your standard of living a notch or two. You put money in circulation. And you help create jobs. So everybody's standard of living goes up.

It's something to think about next time you pick up your daily newspaper. The ads you see there are actually helping you maintain and improve your standard of living. And they're making all of our lives a lot easier. Just ask Sally Campbell.
