Good weather, top quality, keen competition and interested spectators characterized this year's Producers Exhibition. The consensus of opinion obtained from members attending the show indicated that many livestock men visiting from outside the province were high in their praise of the quality which was evidenced throughout all classes of livestock.

and the left abdomen is greatly distended with gas. Breathing becomes difficult, the nostrils are dilated, mouth open and the tongue protrudes. Moaning and grunting are often noticed. The pressure of the gas interferes with the function of the lungs and heart and the animal dies of suffocation.

Prevention & Treatment

There are precautionary measures which will help to prevent bloat. Care must be taken when turning cattle in to leguminous pastures, particularly if the pasture is wet, or wilted from dry weather. It is best to seed some grass in legume pastures. Turn the animals on to grass before allowing them into the legumes, or give them a good feeding of hay. A good practice is to let the cattle have access to a rock of old feed in the legume pasture.

Medical treatment consists of the administration of a half pint of kerosene or coal-oil. Two ounces of turpentine or creolin are sometimes effective. These medicines should be given in one quart of milk. A gag of a piece of rope or wood placed in the animal's mouth helps in allowing the gas to escape through the mouth. When emergency treatment is required a trochar and canula should be used. The point of insertion is situated equal distances from the point of the hip, the last rib and the vertebrae or backbone, on the left flank. A small incision is made in the skin, the trochar and canula forced through the skin and muscle and into the rumen. The trochar is now removed leaving the sheath or canula in place, allowing the gas to escape. Reinsert the trochar before removing the canula.

The above treatment should only be applied in cases of emergency. If the services of a veterinarian are available it is better to use other types of drugs which are quicker acting and not as hard on the animal.

The animal should have a laxative

MRS. A. H. RAYNER

The neighborhood and surrounding district of Greenmount, Prince Edward Island, was greatly grieved by the sudden passing of the late Mrs. A. H. Rayner, Greenmount, on the morning of August 9th, 1952. Mrs. Rayner had been in fairly good health and had been active in her own home until the time of her decease. Mrs. Rayner was a much respected and honored person in her community. Her kindness and benevolence was widely known and given evidence by the scores of relatives, neighbors and friends who came to pay their last respects.

The funeral service was conducted from her late residence with William O. Weale, former Minister of the Greenmount Church of Christ where Mrs. Rayner was a long time member and served as efficient clerk, and Marvel D. Dunbar, minister of the Christian Church, Charlottetown.

Mr. Weale spoke feelingly and appropriately of the rich and faithful contribution made by the deceased in her services to the Church and community. His remarks were upon the "Blessing of Sleep in Death", "Rock of Ages" and "Under His Wings", both loved favorites of the family were sung. Mr. William Weale sang beautifully the solo, "When the Mists Have Rolled Away". The Scripture and prayer were read by Mr. Dunbar.

The pall-bearers were: Russel Rayner, Wallace Rayner, Alvin Rayner, Everett Platts, nephews; Alfred Foley and Timothy Mackey, neighbors.

Flower bearers for the many beautiful floral pieces were: Ailida, Velma, Faye, Irene, Wilford, Archibald, Pansy, Ronald and Donald Rayner; Janet and Caroline Owen, grandchildren of the deceased.

Left to mourn her loss are the children Hazel, Mrs. Harold Simpson, Sydney; Beatrice, Mrs. Allison F. Owen, Charlottetown; Olive, Mrs. Roscoe Nice, Waterloo, Indiana; Emily, Mrs. Howard Rayner; George and Charles in the home community; thirty-five grandchildren; one brother George Merrill, in her old home West Boylston, Mass., U.S.A.; many nieces, nephews and other relatives; countless friends and neighbors who will miss greatly her smiling countenance and Christian influence.

Committal was by Mr. William Weale in the Christian Church Cemetery. "Blessed to the Lord is the death of His Saints."

He then moved to Charlottetown, where he was employed as a carman, with the Canadian National Railways for twenty years. We And Our Neighbours

by Ruhamah Scheinfeld Frank

GUESS WHERE

There are still many beautiful days this summer. Would you like to spend them—at no extra cost, in a land where: "Flocks of geese wander along country lanes, square hay ricks have adjustable pointed roofs, farmhouses are painted blue, green and yellow with steeply slanting roofs forming crosses. Silver fox farms, numerous bays and rivers with sleek, lowly boats ED CARTS DRAWN BY OXEN EVEN ON THE PAVED STREETS OF THE ISLAND'S CAPITAL CITY, (the capital letters are mine) these the traveler can see in a day's drive around the Island."

Where is this so quaint and secluded part of the world? It is none other than our own Prince Edward Island! The paragraph quoted comes from an article of about 1000 words in the Travel and Resort section of the New York Sunday Times of August 10. The rest of the material gives the facts any tourist wants to know; something of the history, geography, resources, travel routes, beaches, fishing accommodations and prices. It is signed article in the most popular and scholarly newspaper in the U. S. and as reliable as any in the world. Yet here we are. One in a while of course, a few geese do wander into a country lane; there are square hayricks with adjustable pointed roofs; one can find here, as almost everywhere, farmhouses painted blue, green and yellow, though they certainly are not common. Perhaps even farmhouses with steeply slanting roofs forming crosses" do exist, though we could find no one who had seen any such, but — "TWO WHEELED CARTS DRAWN BY OXEN EVEN ON THE PAVED STREETS OF THE ISLAND'S CAPITAL CITY" well, "slightly exaggerated" as one famous humorist said when he read the notice of the death!

We can read this impression of ourselves with nothing worse than a mixture of irritation and amusement. After all, our thousands of visitors each year can see for themselves. And if any are drawn here by our—oxen, they will surely find compensations for their disappointment. But the whole idea behind it—the idea that simple truth is not enough to gain attention, is disturbing.

It brings up the difficult and complicated subject of the effect upon children and adults of the modern press, radio, movies and advertising. Obviously these channels of communication wish to gain as many followers as possible. They thus take man's basic curiosity about persons and places and things and play up the unusual the sensational, the simple to grasp, that draw the attention of the majority most easily. Just what this does to the development of people, is not clearly understood. We shall attempt to discuss this in a future column.

This much, however, is certain. Again, we cannot look back to the days when books and newspapers were finer and there were no movies or radio. Books and newspapers then, were written for the few who had been trained to read. Writing and publishing was more a profession that sought the improvement of its readers than a business, which is frankly profit-seeking. For better or worse, the past will not return and we must do what we can about the present.

In passing, however, we can mention the undeniable fact that fine and reliable news coverage, books of the highest quality, are available to all, and indeed are read by a great many. Also, splendid radio programs and good movies are found as well as less desirable ones.

The portents on every hand are that Canada is booming; that she will in a short time become as big and rich as her neighbor to the south. Let us hope that she will be able to avoid some dangers of prosperity that we have touched on. Her larger centers have of course, not been entirely free of the practice of overlooking human values for material gain. Nations like individuals find temptation increasing with power.

In the meantime, it is nice to live on P. E. I. where two wheeled carts drawn by oxen may not exist but where there is still an active sense of truth in press, radio, and in business.
