WARNING

The Fishing rights of Hardy's Mills is leased to the undersigned. I have no objections to the patrons of the mill and neighbors fishing, but strongly object to parties using or damaging the boats, or breaking into the shack. Anyone found stealing or damaging will be prosecuted. The party who took the tan boots and two Yale padlocks, the latter being no good to anyone but owner, as he holds the keys, had better leave them in the stable, or they will be asked to go.

FINDING THINGS

Chapter 53
It was Pan's first big party, and it was an amazing event. It was also the first studio she had ever been in.

It was one of the gigantic studio apartments that fairly fill New York. When she said something about the size of the building as the cab stopped Gloria laughed and remarked, "I'm sure if painters lived in all these places, we would be the art centre of the world. As a matter of fact they build these expensive studio apartments for anyone rich enough to live in them—which is rarely the artist. If George hadn't a private income, I'm sure his portraits would never pay his rent." They went the length of a long hall done up in gloomy dark panelled oak in English baronial manner and a great carved stone fireplace with blazing logs piled in it. "I'm sure each tenant is charged an extra thousand a year for that beautiful fireplace," Gloria whispered as they went up in the elevator.

There was one apartment to a floor. George met them at the door, and they followed him into what seemed a huge room to Pan. It was a big studio facing the Park and as it was high, looked far out over the tree tops and the little lake where the swan boats ran in the Summer. The easel and model stand had been pushed into a corner, a phonograph played a merry dance tune from the model's chair on the platform. A dozen or more people were dancing.

"You haven't met my aunt yet," George said, and introduced Pan to a somewhat severe and competent woman, with smoothly, greyish hair and a simple, modest black sequin gown. Aunt Harriet ran three women's clubs and looked it.

"I might call her my itinerant chaperone," George said. "Now and then she lives here and looks after most of the things she's organizing and lecturing. I don't know what she organizes—" It was plain George liked teasing his aunt, who took it with a certain aloof humor.

"Most men have entirely too much looking after," she answered him. "George, I know Miss Adela's plain and 40, but you must dance with her, you know."

George went off obediently. Until the dance was ended, Pan sat with Gloria, who whispered amusing comments about the people in the room.

"Mrs. Austen you already know. She fancies herself an expert on old and rare books. Miss Adola Hinds goes in for horse racing and won't talk anything but horses or travel—she thinks it adds spice and dash to her make-up and balances a pug nose. But it doesn't. That old chap in the corner who is carrying on a flirtation with the 15 year old girl, is a learned professor of economics. Aunt Harriet would like to marry him, but hasn't succeeded so far—"

She rattled on a mixture of friendly and unfriendly comments, but all delivered so merrily none of them carried any sting. Pan began to be dismayed at the strange guests, she couldn't talk horse racing to the sporty lady, never having seen a race in her life. She knew nothing of rare old books, her book knowledge was sound enough but confined to library editions. Norris City boasted no serious woman's clubs—so how could she be intelligent with Aunt Harriet?

"Don't worry," Gloria whispered. "They all adore talking so that all they want is someone to listen. They're all so bored with each other they'll fall upon your neck if you'll only seem interested. You're a good little listener."

"Which is a higher art than being a good talker," said George over Gloria's shoulder.

"And an art more rarely met with, you should add," Sir Cyril, Gloria answered, looking up and laughing.

"Come and dance with me, I'm sending hobby to amuse the child," George begged. They had taken to referring to Pan as The Child. "And an art more rarely met with, you should add," Sir Cyril, Gloria answered, looking up and laughing.

"Take the child over the studio, she's never seen a place like this," Gloria answered. And the next moment she danced off with a very tall man possessing a very long and lanky moustache.

The apartment seemed to swarm with people. The studio was two stories high, with a balcony at one end, a room in itself, filled with books and with lounge chairs under a lamp. One couple sat here and talked. A hallway ran from this, with glimpses of bedrooms on each side. Down the steps, on a level with the studio floor, was an immense dining room with an ancient refractory table in the centre and great carved oak chairs about it. The walls hung with tapestry. A butler and a maid were putting out plates of sandwiches and salad and coffee in a large copper urn with a spirit lamp under it.

They entered the studio as the dance stopped. Pan looked up at George and found him staring soberly at Gloria. Gloria was the centre of a group of half a dozen men, her clear laugh was heard above theirs.

George was in love, Pan thought with a little pang. And Gloria was not being nice to him.

Tomorrow—At The Party

TO A DEPARTED FRIEND.
Far, far beyond the range of mortal vision,
His soul has sped its swift unerring way,
Resigned for grander, nobler habitation,
His fragile tenement of clay,
He murmured not when shadows high approaching,
Presaged a denser darkness yet to be,
He faltered not, when shadows deepening, lengthening,
Proclaimed the yearning of eternity,
For lo! the cross of Christ, in shining radiance, uprising,
Beamed forth, bright star of hope!
mid the encircling gloom,
And in that source of light, and
endless life, confiding,
He passed triumphant thro' the
portals of the tomb,
Immortal Love, Thine hand with power redeemed him,
Unveiled to him the mysteries of
Thy grace,
Adoring Lamb, Thou dost forever
seal him,
As spirit, worthy Thy glorious sacrifice.
—TILLIE HAWKINS,
Charlottetown.

HELP FOR THE STARVING RUSSIANS.

There are a few imagine, fortunately only a comparatively few, that Canadians can afford to be indifferent to the call of the starving Russians for bread. They would even turn a deaf ear to the appeal of famished children. They would carry indifference so far as to lay themselves open to the charge of being indifferent to the fate of these unfortunate little ones.
The great teacher, Pascal, truly said: "Men will never be strong enough to do without compassion, the seal and covenant of human dignity itself." It is not according to the order of nature that they should; for a nature that could do without compassion would be lacking in the chief essential of a human being.
Hence said truly: "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind." But it is impossible to show kindness without first being able to feel one's fellows. Response to such an appeal as the starving children of Russia are making, is the test both of our humanity and of our

NURSE THINKS NOTHING BETTER

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Advised for all Women in Poor Health

Toronto, Ontario.—I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for years and it is the only patent medicine I ever recommend. I am a nurse and if I find a woman in poor health I always tell her to take it. Although you know that doctors and nurses do not use patent medicines I must say that I think there is nothing better than your Vegetable Compound. When I first took it I was so tired when I got up in the morning that I could not eat, and when I went to bed I was so tired to sleep. My mother-in-law told me that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was just what I wanted so I tried it and only took two bottles when I felt better. Since then I have found that there is nothing that makes me feel so well, for it seems to build my system right up. I don't know any other medicine that has done so much for women.—Mrs. W. H. BAXTER, 19 Wellesley Ave., Toronto, Ontario. They have been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after other medicines failed. It has been tried for nearly fifty years and not found wanting. If you are suffering from any of the various ailments which accompany female weakness try it.
