We are pleased to learn that Mr. Theo. J. Chappelle, of the Diamond Bookstore, has been appointed Agent for the Alden Book Co. of New York (formerly known as the American Book Exchange). The superiority and cheapness of the excellent works published by this firm is universally acknowledged. In a day or two Mr. Chappelle will open up some hundreds of volumes of the choicest editions, varying in price from two cents each upwards, which will embrace the full catalogue list, and be sold at publishers' prices. Almost a fatal drowning accident occurred at Big Pond, yesterday. Messrs. Michael Foley, W. S. Tupper, and Dennis Murphy went to the Pond for an evening's fishing. There they obtained a small skiff, and two of the party, Messrs. Tupper and Foley, rowed into the middle of the lake to fish. The boat shortly sprung a leak, and began to sink rapidly. They could not row her ashore in her sinking condition. There was no one but Hansen ballast to throw over to lighten her, and a sharp discussion ensued regarding who was heaviest, and who should first go, or be thrown overboard. At length Mr. Tupper took a "header" and struck out for shore; but the weight of his companion was still too great, and the skiff continued to sink beneath the surface. The gallant Collector, who now decided to swim for it, struck out towards Mr. Murphy who was arriving like a beacon light on the shore. Both arrived in safety but much exhausted. We congratulate them on their escape.

Rev. Father McGillivray's Monument.

A monument specially designed and executed by our townsman Mr. E. G. Hunter for the Catholics of Charlottetown, now marks the spot in the new cemetery, where repose the remains of their beloved pastor the Rev. Father McGillivray. It is neat and comely in its proportions, with all its details well in keeping, and wrought out with much delicacy and taste. Although not rigidly belonging to any given order, its leading features are those of the Doric. Its height is sixteen feet, and it is wrought in seven pieces. It stands on a foundation of solid masonry, which is five feet deep. The ground base is of Wallace grey stone, and from it springs, in striking contrast, the graceful structure formed of pure white marble, from the quarries of Rutland, Vermont. A marble base with a wash, rests on the grey stone, and is surmounted by another moulded base, from which the pedestal rises. This is adorned with four raised panels, on one of which is the following inscription—

ERECTED BY THE CATHOLICS OF CHARLOTTETOWN, TO THE MEMORY OF THEIR BELOVED PASTOR, REV. ALEXANDER MCGILLIVRAY, WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE ON THE 4TH OF JULY, 1883. OF YOUR CHURCH, Pray for the repose of his soul.

The cap of the pedestal is moulded with laurel enrichments. From the cap rises the spire, on which there is a medallion likeness of the deceased. This, we can fancy, was the most irksome portion of the whole work. The ordinary monumental likeness is in profile, which presents the artist with an easier task than the work of the photographer, giving a three-quarter view of the countenance. This indeed lays a severe stress on the skill of the sculptor, and this was what Mr. Hunter had to work from. He is to be congratulated upon his success, considering the difficulties he had to encounter. Had his study been in profile, his difficulties would have been fewer, and his success greater. As it is, he has managed to infuse into the marble much that will call back to those who knew him the look and bearing of Father McGillivray. Over the medallion, on either side of the spire, are dormers with frosted Gothic panels. At the eaves of these dormers the spire assumes an octagon shape, gradually diminishing to five inches at the top. Here a mortised cap supports the cross which fittingly completes the structure.

With the workmanship of this monument few will find fault. Mr. Hunter has executed his task well. From the foundation to the cross, artistic care is visible in every detail. Clean sharp cutting, tasteful decoration, and a harmonious relation in the details, characterize the whole work. Some may consider the structure too spiral in its design, but no one will deny it the charms of grace and beauty. It is a memorial set up by a grateful people, to tell to those who may come after them, the endearing relations that existed between them and a holy priest, whose last resting place it marks, not, we think, unbecomingly. —Herald.
