Could not get Insured.

Rejected by Straight Line and Mutual Companies. But now insured in both.

"Should I die while I am in a position to pay my insurance premiums, my family will owe their support to Scott's Sarsaparilla. Two years ago I applied to two companies for insurance, $1000 in each. My face was a mass of pimply blotches and my urine did not stand the test. One doctor in examining me said I could not pass, but that my trouble was curable. He advised an alternative medicine, and I commenced taking Scott's Sarsaparilla. Both companies rejected me, but four months later, after I had taken five bottles of your remedy I am thankful to say both accepted me as a risk—one being a stock company, the other a mutual. The examiner who previously examined me, remarked 'I never saw such a change in any man.' This is endorsed by Mr. J. Todd, the popular druggist, corner Queen and Crawford Streets, Toronto.

Scott's Sarsaparilla builds up debilitated constitutions, imparts strength, vigor and vitality, cures skin diseases, rheumatism, gout, indigestion and all complaints arising from poor or poisoned blood. Of all druggists, $1 per bottle.

SUICIDE INCREASES.

MANY TITLED PERSONS INDULGE IN IT.

In the English Peerage in the Present Generation—Also in the Continental Aristocracy, and Royal Families—Some Notable Cases.

Suicide is increasing among the aristocracy to such a degree that those unphilosophical people who fondly imagine that to be a lord is the culmination of bliss must have their faith in this respect somewhat shaken.

Among the most notable suicides in the English peerage within the memory of the present generation are those of the Duke of Bedford, probably the richest peer of the British realm, and the Marquis of Londonderry, who was driven to desperation by blackmailers, who preyed upon the infamous vice for which he was noted. Lord Conington, the head of the house of Parrell, took his own life, and so did the Earl of Jellicote, Lord Cloncurry, Viscount Forth, whose son, Lord Drummond, died in New York, a porter in the employ of the New York World, and the Earl of Munster, an illegitimate son of King William IV. There are others to whom the coroner's jury gave the benefit of the doubt in ascribing the death of the Marquis of Queensberry, the late Earl of Londale and the Duke of Hamilton, who is pretty generally supposed to have blown out his brains in a fit of rage with the pain of gout during a visit to Algiers.

Suicides are also frequent in the Continental aristocracy. Such a case is recorded in the annals of which have not been darkened in recent years by self-inflicted death. Only a few weeks ago was recorded the suicide of the Duke of Anjou, the Prince Pignatelli, whose lovely wife the Crown Prince of Italy has been so devoted that they have been nicknamed "the Inseparables." In 1878 there is the Spanish Duke of San Carlos, principal chamberlain to the little King of Spain, who blew his brains out in a fit of jealous mania the other day on returning home from mass, leaving a letter bewailing his inability to attain moral perfection. Just about the same time, Prince Corsini, the popular aide-camp of the Duke of Austria, and so well known to American visitors at Florence, shot himself through the heart on account of losses at gambling. At the court of Vienna, Count Stephen Czaky, son of the Hungarian Cabinet Minister of that name and a chamberlain of the Emperor, cut his throat in the suite of a financial trouble, and at the court of Berlin, one of the Princes Reuss, who held a high office in the Emperor's household, took his life in the suite of a quarrel with the young monarch with a disgraceful offense.

Even in royal families suicide ends many lives. The most curious case, perhaps, being that of Queen Isabella's son-in-law, Count Aragon, who cut his throat in his wife's presence while in a fit of epileptic frenzy. A number of the houses of Bonaparte, Count Cambronne, belonging to the Lucien branch of the family, shot himself through the heart in his apartments in the Tuileries, in consequence of his inability to pay his losses at the gambling table. The father of Queen Marguerite of the Netherlands, in consequence of a beautiful residence which his wife, the Duchess of Genoa, occupied on the shore of Lake Como, Sultan Abdul Assiz stabbed himself to death in a palace of seclusion. Prince Baldwin of Belgium and Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria are known to have committed suicide in consequence of their having been entangled in a situation from which it was impossible that they should extricate themselves without serious loss of honor.

Had the policeman who attacked the coachman of the British Ambassador at Vienna lived in the last century he would long ere this have paid with his life the penalty of his assault. As it is he will be let off with dismissal from the force and a term of imprisonment. And it must be confessed that he well deserves his punishment. It seems that the old English coachman of Sir Edmund Monson got into an altercation about an overcharge in his bill at a restaurant in the Prater. A policeman was called in and took the whole party of waiters, the coachman and his wife, an elderly Englishwoman, off to the police station. The policeman said that on their way thither the Englishman made some threatening movement. Thereupon the policeman drew his sword and fell several severe cuts on the old man's head and shoulders until he fell insensible. The wife, who interfered, likewise received a couple of cuts from the policeman's sword. The matter was taken up by the entire Diplomatic Corps, who joined Sir Edmund Monson in demanding exemplary punishment for this gross insult to the most cherished privileges, namely the immunity of themselves and their servants from interference on the part of the police and civil authorities of the country to which they are accredited. Swords are far too easily and readily drawn in Germany and Austria. Four young noblemen in military uniform in the streets of Vienna, one of them Count Czaky, son of the statesman of that name, and another, Prince Bathany, declared that they had been jostled by two Helvetian shopkeepers. To the insulting epithets addressed to them by the officers, the civilians replied in kind. The officers drew their swords and slashed the men until they fell covered with blood. Before a civil tribunal the officers were acquitted. They were censured, however, by their commanding officer for getting into a quarrel with those whose social status was not such as to permit their according them satisfaction in a duel. The climax of the situation is that the lawyer of the victims, Dr. Rosenfeld, who, during the course of his address at the trial, denounced the attack of the four officers upon two unarmed and defenceless men as cowardly, has just been sentenced to pay a fine of 300 florins for having insulted the army of his imperial and apostolic Majesty, the Emperor.

Knowledge. A man may have all the knowledge that this world's life can give him, and yet not be a good man. Knowledge will lift a man higher in this world. Goodness will lift him higher in the next world. Knowledge will give a man power, goodness will give a man direction of power. Knowledge will concentrate a man's intellect to get for himself, and goodness will give the uplifting of others.—Rev. D. Egbert.

Hemstitching seems to be the one requisite to elegance in these days. Pillowcases and sheets of fine cotton as well as those of linen are hemstitched. These are comparatively cheap and the woman who watches bargain counters intelligently sometimes finds full-sized, fine hemstitched sheets selling for 70 or 75 cents a piece.
